Vaughan To Get Call To Testify This Week

Inquiry Is Asked Into Reports He Berated Official Over Grain Ration

By Robert J. Donovan
NYHT News Service

Maj. Gen. Harry H. Vaughan will be called sometime this week to testify in the Senate investigation into activities of Washington "5-percenters."

Definite announcement of the calling of General Vaughan, President Truman's military aid, was made last night in Shelby, N. C., by the chairman of the Senate Investigations Subcommittee, Senator Clyde R. Hoey, (D., N. C.).

It came a few hours after the committee had been asked to inquire into reports that General Vaughan had berated a Department of Agriculture official in 1946 about an order restricting use of grains by brewers and distillers.

The request was made by a committee member, Senator Karl E. Mundt (R., S. Dak.), after some facts about the episode had been disclosed by certain Senators.

Identified as Koenig

According to the Senators, the official who was called down by General Vaughan, was Nathan Koenig. Koenig, on a visit to Puerto Rico, is assistant to Secretary of Agriculture Charles F. Brannan. At the time of Vaughan's reported telephone call to him in 1946 he was executive assistant to former Secretary Clinton P. Anderson, now a Democratic Senator from New Mexico.

In describing the incident the Senators' characterization of General Vaughan's language varied from "abusive" to "a little rough." One Senator said the general gave Koenig "particular hell."

In announcing that the committee would call Vaughan this week, Senator Hoey said:

"The general will be given a chance to make any statement he wants to, covering the charges brought against him. It's not so much that the committee wants to question him as to give him an opportunity to present his answer."

Calling Maragon and Hunt

Others who will be called this week, Senator Hoey said, will be John Maragon, friend of General Vaughan; James V. Hunt, wartime colonel in the Quartermaster Corps, a 5-percenter whose activities, as first exposed by the New York Herald Tribune, prompted the Senate investigation; and Maj. Gen. Herman Feldman, who recently was suspended as Army Quartermaster General on the basis of preliminary findings in the investigation.

Senator Hoey, describing the investigation as having reached the "finishing-up stage," said General Feldman probably will be the first

Gravel Firm's Employes Defer Strike Action

Union employes of the Smoot Sand & Gravel Corp. last night voted to defer a week strike action scheduled for Monday.

The unions involved are Local 77, International Union of Operating Engineers, and Local 639 of the Teamsters Union, both AFL. Employes involved number about 175.

Last night's action was at a joint meeting of the two unions and was announced by John P. Shields, business agent of the operating engineers' local.

Shields said the postponement was decided upon because of "an opportunity to negotiate further" which was not apparent previously. He said another negotiating session between the unions and the firm's management probably would be arranged for Monday.

The two unions have been asking a 25-cent-an-hour wage increase.

Violence Laid to Caller

Policeman, Two Others Shot In Early Morning Gunplay

A District policeman and a civilian were wounded early this morning while attempting to seize a 39-year-old Brentwood man who was also shot during gunplay at 713 Euclid st. nw.

Wounded were Pvt. Leonard J. Faina, of the Tenth Precinct, who was hit in the right knee; Savannah Gillis, 36, a janitor at the Naval Research Laboratory, hit in the side; and his brother-in-law, Milan Gordon, 39, laborer, of 4518 Banner st., Brentwood, Md., wounded in the abdomen.

Pvt. D. M. Smith, Faina's partner in Scout Car 101, who also participated in the gunfire, told the following story after the shooting in the presence of Inspector Lloyd E. Kelly on the scene.

Gordon, who was said to have been estranged from his wife, arrived at the Euclid st. house seeking her. Upon discovering she was not there, he became violent, displaying a revolver. At that point, his brother-in-law, Gillis, called police.

When Faina and Smith arrived, Gillis started to lead them up the stairway. Smith said Gordon was seen at the top of the stairway with a gun. He was ordered to drop it. At that point, gunfire broke out with one bullet missing Smith and hitting Faina, who was behind Smith.

Smith said that about a dozen shots were exchanged, with one felling Gordon and another hitting Gillis, his brother-in-law. Smith said Gordon shot first, rapidly emptying his revolver of all six bullets.

Gordon was finally disarmed by Smith as he stumbled downstairs, still wielding his weapon. When the gun was wrested from him, he submitted to police and was taken to Emergency Hospital where he was placed under police guard.

At the time of the shooting, police said, there were six persons at the Euclid st. house, all of whom were reported to have been threatened by Gordon before police came.

Faina was taken to Freedmen's Hospital, nearest to the scene, for treatment, while Gillis was taken to Garfield Hospital.

NLRB Ruling

Union Held Liable for Back Pay

By The Associated Press

A union is jointly and individually liable for the back pay of an employe fired because of a union demand, the National Labor Relations Board ruled last night.

The ruling was the first of its kind in a case that assessed monetary liability upon the funds of a labor organization.

Many unions have been sued successfully or fined under the Taft-Hartley law, and some uncontested claims against them have been settled in Labor Board proceedings. But last night's decision is the first by the board in a disputed claim for back pay as the result of a discharge upon a union demand.

The board ordered Local 456 of the AFL Teamsters Union, Mount Vernon, N. Y., and H. Milton Newman, Mount Vernon trucking operator, to pay Ernest Fritz, jr., back wages between March 11 and June 9, 1948. Newman laid off Fritz during that period after the union called a seven-day strike and demanded his removal from work until he paid his union dues.

The board said the union acted

Cool as it was yesterday, the temperature was short of the record low of 54 set on August 20, in 1926, 1900 and 1879.

Two Israeli Scientists Invent Synthetic 'Muscle' of Plastic

By Kenneth Bilby

Rehovoth, Israel, Aug. 20 (NYHT).—Scientists of the Weizman Institute have discovered how to duplicate human muscular activity with synthetic materials, it was learned today.

They are now applying their principle to the construction of an engine, believed the first to convert chemical energy directly into mechanical energy.

Dr. David Bergman, scientific director of the institute, said today the discovery constituted an advance of "fundamental importance" to the scientific world.

However, he added a cautionary note. He doubted, for example, that artificial muscles for war-maimed persons would result, since the synthetic muscle principle bears no relationship to the structure of human cells.

Main credit rests with Dr. Aaron Katchalski, 35, a Polish-born physical chemist, trained at Hebrew University and the University of Basle. Dr. Katchalski will report on his discovery next month at the Congress of International Union of Chemical Societies.

In his laboratory today, Dr. Katchalski said the basic problem was to develop a molecular chain which could be expanded or con-

D. C. Incomes 6th Highest In Nation

Per Capita Sum Put at $1691; Is 20 Pct. Higher Than U. S. Figure

By Howard L. Dutkin
Post Reporter

District residents in 1948 received per capita income of $1691—sixth highest in the United States, the Department of Commerce reported yesterday.

This was a $59 increase over the $1632 per capita income reported for Washingtonians in 1947 and 20 per cent higher than the National average of $1410.

Nearly every State showed an increase. The National average rose 7 per cent over the 1947 average of $1319.

United States incomes from all sources, including social insurance benefits, reached a total of $206 billions, a 9 per cent increase over 1947.

Illinois Second Highest

Individual incomes in the District averaged $1885 in 1948, a 4 per cent increase over the $1804 the year before.

New York State had the highest per capita income with $1891, and Mississippi the lowest with $758.

Illinois was second highest with $1817; Montana, third, with $1791; Delaware, fourth, with $1741; and Connecticut, fifth, with $1700.

Maryland's per capita income for 1948 was $1546, or 10 per cent above the national average. The same State showed a 1947 per capita income of $1454.

Virginia's per capita income was 80 per cent of the national average, standing at $1159 in 1948 as against $1085 in 1947.

The largest regional gain in total income from 1947 to 1948 was registered in the central states of Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Michigan, Minnesota, Ohio and Wisconsin, where individual income jumps averaged 12 per cent.

The smallest increase, 6 per cent, was noted in the New England and Far Western areas. With the exception of Michigan, which rose 7 per cent in the year, every State of the central region showed a rise exceeding the national increase. In every New England and Far Western State the increase from 1947 to 1948 was less than the national average.

"In 1948, for the second successive year, widely varying rates of change in farm incomes accounted primarily for the differences among States in percentage changes in total income," the report said.

North Dakota, Kansas Drop

Large increases in agricultural income were cited as the main factor in top-ranking 1947-1948 increases in total income of Iowa, 33 per cent; South Dakota, 22 per cent; Nebraska, 19 per cent; and Arkansas, 16 per cent.

The reverse was true in North Dakota, where reductions in farm income were blamed for the 4 per cent decline in that State's total income and in Kansas, which showed a 1 per cent drop.

Income payments, figured in the report, represent the current income received by individuals from all sources, including wages and salaries, net income of unincorporated businesses including farms, dividends, interest, net rents and such other items as social security payments, relief and veterans' pensions and benefits.

The following shows the estimated 1947 and 1948 individual incomes by States and the percentage

Senate Group Poll Favors Full Aid

But Arms Program Is Not Assured Sum Of $1,450,000,000 Will Be Restored

By the United Press

The $1,450,000,000 foreign military aid program will be approved by the Joint Foreign Relations and Armed Services Committee of the Senate, a poll of the 25-member group revealed last night.

But this is no assurance the plan to rearm Atlantic Pact powers and five other nations will breeze through the Senate without heavy trimming. There is strong oppositon from a large number of Senators not members of the committee.

A United Press survey showed that 13 members of the joint committee will support substantially the full program asked by President Truman and Secretary of State Acheson. Three Senators suggested major spending reductions, six were undecided, and three were not available for comment.

'Delayed-Action' Effect

Comment by the committee members ranged from Chairman Connally's warning that heavy reduction would "emasculate" the entire security program to a statement by Senator Russell (D., Ga.) that a 50 percent House-approved arms cut didn't go far enough.

The poll was taken 48 hours after the House sliced $580,405,000 off the Administration program. Some Senate committee members said the House vote would have a "delayed-action" effect on the Senate.

The 13 Senators who said they would support the Administration program or substantially the spending total asked by Mr. Truman and Acheson included 10 Democrats and three Republicans. Three Southern Democrats lined up for a major cut, and five Republicans and one usually staunch Administration Democrat either were undecided or declined comment.

Vote Is Listed

Senators backing the full spending program or a plan to grant all but 160 million dollars on a half-cash, half-contract authority basis were:

Democrats—Connally (Tex.), Pepper (Fla.), Thomas (Utah), Kefauver (Tenn.), Green (R. I.), Hunt (Wyo.), Fullbright (Ark.), McMahon (Conn.), Tydings (Md.), and, with qualifications, Chapman (Ky.).

Republicans—Vandenberg (Mich.), Wiley (Wisc.), Smith (N. J.).

Senators George (D., Ga.), Byrd (D., Va.), and Russell favored a program to total no more than three million dollars in new and reserve weapons and surplus equipment originally valued at 450 million dollars.

Undecided or declining comment were Republican Senators Lodge (Mass.), Morse (Oreg.), Knowland (Calif.), Gurney (S. Dak.), and Hickenlooper (Iowa). Senator Johnson (D., Tex.) also declined comment.

'Lack of Confidence'

Republican Senators Bridges (N. H.), Saltonstall (Mass.) and Baldwin (Conn.), were absent and were not polled.

Representative Vorys (R., Ohio), said meanwhile that the House cut in proposed arms aid spending was "a vote of lack of confidence" in Administration foreign policy.

He said the bill would have been defeated Thursday night if the Peanut Price Supports Cost $100,000 Every Business Day

By John W. Ball
Post Reporter

Uncle Sam is spending about $100,000 every business day to maintain the price of peanuts.

Although price support for peanuts is not in the class with potatoes, its rapid increase in recent years indicates the direction in which the price support programs are headed.

The best guess of the best guessers among the men who handle the Government peanut price support program is that the cost will zoom this year to about 30 million dollars.

For last year—the 12 months ended June 30—the cost is estimated to have been somewhere between 21 and 22 million bucks. The returns aren't all in yet.

An idea how the Government's contributions to the Nation's peanut farmers have soared is plain in the bare statement of the cost of the program for the last four years.

In the fiscal year ended June 30, 1947, the peanut program cost the American taxpayer the comparatively small sum of $727,480.

In the next year it jumped almost four times—to $2,757,329.

In the next year it made a still more spectacular leap—to the figure of 21 to 22 million dollars mentioned before. In the current year the estimate most generally set is for a cost of 30 million.

There are several causes for the great increase.

First, the war caused a tremendous demand for fats and oils, and peanuts are one of the world's best sources of vegetable oil. Peanut growers were encouraged to increase their acreage.

This demand continued after the war, until a year ago, owing to the continuing world shortage of fats and oils. The war destroyed many of the traditional sources of vegetable oils—in the Far East particularly. There the coconut oils, the palm oils and the Asiatic nut oils, and the copra production areas were overrun. Now they have come back—at least most of them. The export market that was so enormous in the two years after V-J Day has virtually disappeared. Today, in this country at least, there is too much oil.

The estimate of 30 million dollars for this year is set after a study of the peanut law just passed by Congress as a part of the cotton acreage allotment and marketing quota bills.

This year the peanut acreage is 2,546,000, as compared with 3,311,-

Russia Urges Removal Of Tito, Other Leaders, Suggests Revolution

Soviet to Protect Subjects in His Country, Note Warns Marshal

London, Aug. 20 (U.P.).—Russia today issued a virtual call for revolution in Yugoslavia, and warned Marshal Tito that "effective measures" will be taken to protect Soviet citizens in his country.

Radio Moscow broadcast the text of a new 2000-word Russian note to Yugoslavia, calling on supporters of the Communist Information Bureau there to "remove" Yugoslavia's present leaders unless they "admit their mistakes openly."

"The Information Bureau does not doubt that the Communist Party of Yugoslavia will be able to carry out this honorable task," the note said.

The document declared that Russia will "be forced to resort to effective measures if necessary to defend the rights and interests of Soviet citizens in Yugoslavia and to call to order the violators."

Reform or Removal

The note urged Cominform followers to "compel their present leaders to admit their mistakes openly and honestly and to correct them . . . or, if the present leaders of the Communist Party of Yugoslavia are incapable of doing this, to remove them and put forward a new internationalist party leadership of Yugoslavia."

"In all Marxist parties where there is internal party democracy, such a method of changing the leadership is natural and entirely normal," the broadcast said.

Western political observers commented that any such change in modern Yugoslavia would almost certainly require the use of force.

Today's note was the latest of a series of bitter exchanges between Russia and Yugoslavia growing out of the "excommunication" of Tito by the Cominform a little more than a year ago.

The Russian document replied to a Yugoslav note of July 30 which in turn replied to a Soviet note of July 25 accusing Tito's regime of beating, torturing and unlawfully arresting Russians in Yugoslavia.

Rejected as False

Today's note rejected the July 30 Yugoslav document as "internally false and politically groundless." The broadcast said that the new note was delivered to Belgrade two days ago.

"The Yugoslav government maintains utter silence about the facts of the unbearable and inhuman prison regime of the arrested Soviet citizens, as a result of which many have been brought by tortures, beatings and deprivation

British Riled at U. S. Critics, Wish Snyder Were Acheson

Choice of Treasury Secretary for Talks Deepens Pessimism

By Homer Bigart
NYHT News Service

President Truman's decision to have Secretary of the Treasury Snyder preside at the crucial Anglo-Canadian-American Economic Conference September 6, instead of Secretary of State Dean Acheson has resulted in deepening British pessimism over success of the conference.

The British were disappointed over the choice of the former Missouri banker who, in his recent visit to London, seemed to them to display little appreciation of the enormous political consequences that would attend possible British economic collapse.

The British would have much preferred Secretary Acheson. They feel that the crisis demands something more than a banker's approach, for what is at stake is the whole structure of the Western Alliance against Soviet Russia.

The State Department is fully aware that Britain will go bankrupt by Christmas unless the rapid decline of gold and dollar reserves

'Twisting Lion's Tail Is Risky,' Shinwell Counsels Americans

London, Aug. 20 (AP).—The steady lashing from some sections of American public opinion raised welts on the British hide today. The result: supporters of the Labor Government struck back, independent organs showed a flash of injured national pride, the Conservative press protested.

The stream of suggestions that Britain would need less dollar help from the United States if she would do more to help herself, gave rise to this headline in the Sunday Pictorial, a pro-Labor tabloid which claims five million circulation:

"We British Are Tired of Yankee Insults."

Emanuel Shinwell, Minister of War, in a speech at Aspatria declared it was time that the American and other critics quit "sneering" at Britain and remember that "the game of twisting the lion's tail is a risky one and it may recoil on those who indulge in this pastime."

"The suggestion that Britain is

Failure, Says Reynaud of Aid to Europe

Ex-French Premier Urges Setting Up of Large Trading Area

Strasbourg, France, Aug. 20 (AP).—Foreign Premier Paul Reynaud, French representative in the European Consultative Assembly, said today the European end of the Marshall Plan is a failure.

He said the American aid program had not developed free trade in Europe, and added that he would elaborate this on the Assembly floor next week.

Urging the European council to establish a large trading area in Europe, Reynaud declared the Assembly must solve economic problems first if it hopes to settle some of Europe's pressing political issues.

"The OEEC (Organization for European Economic Cooperation which helps administer the Marshall Plan) has failed," said Reynaud. "The United States has a great interest, it seems to me, in supporting the Council of Europe.

Reynaud said he will address the Assembly Tuesday morning, when the legislature takes up the role of the European council in the economic domain.

"I agree with Mr. Hoffman," said Reynaud, "that a large European market must be created."

He referred to Paul G. Hoffman, administrator of the Economic Cooperation Administration (ECA).

Strike Crisis In Finland Seen Easing

Helsinki, Finland, Aug. 20 (AP).—The nation-wide Communist strike offensive today showed signs of weakening.

Workers in many areas returned to their jobs.

The Social Democratic Government of Premier Karl August Fagerholm, however, remained on guard. It kept its army and police forces on an alert.

The government called the wave of strikes a Communist maneuver to seize power and seat a Red regime in Helsinki.

Helsinki authorities promised to send the Communists into a crushing defeat. Soon after trouble began Thursday, the government struck back by arresting Communist leaders in several regions.

In neighboring Sweden, informed sources described the strike action as the most carefully planned Communist bid for power in Finland since the war.

The Moscow press called the Helsinki government's action against the strikers a "bloody suppression of Finnish workers."

Finland, under fire from Moscow for some time, is the only nation on Russia's western doorstep with a non-Communist government.

In the third day of the labor crisis the Ministry of Finance opened a propaganda campaign against Communist strikers.

Newspaper advertisements warned workers not to heed strike calls and posters attacking the Communists were tacked up in the streets.

Apparently determined to fight on, the Communists rushed a letter to President Juho Paasikivi charging the strikers' constitutional rights were violated when police dispersed a crowd of workers in Kemi two days ago.

They said the incident violated Finland's peace treaty with Russia.

In Stockholm, Swedish experts on Russian foreign policy said they believed the Soviet Union was not prepared to go out of her way to help hoist Finland's Moscow-trained Communists into power.

Emergency Declared

Chile Rushes All Warships To Cap New Red-Led Revolt

Santiago, Chile, Aug. 20 (U.P.).—Warships were rushed to Chile's vital coastal mining areas today and modified martial law was declared in the entire country to counter what was described officially as the second Communist attempt in a week to overthrow the government.

The entire naval fleet was mobilized to "isolate and occupy" the coal mines in Concepcion and O'Higgins Provinces south of here, and the nitrate and copper mines in northern Chile

President Gabriel Gonzalez Videla said one-half of the fleet was sent south at dawn and the other half to the north.

[The Associated Press said the government announced tonight that its military forces are in complete control of the "revolutionary attempt" in the coal mines of Concepcion.]

It added that Communists were counting on a general strike involving hundreds of thousands of government, banking and industrial workers but that prompt efforts had frustrated the plans.

The President said this was another Communist attempt to unseat him, after the government succeeded in suppressing this week's bloody Communist-inspired riots in Santiago.

Norfolk, Va., Aug. 20 (AP).—An airborne infantryman saved the life of a fellow soldier in parachute jumps today during an assault landing exercise at Camp Pendleton, Va.

The full-scale amphibious assault landing was the final phase of operation Camid IV for some 880 West Point cadets and Annapolis midshipmen.

Pfc. Eugene F. Cushing of Modesto, Calif., was credited with saving the life of Pfc. Richard Rusk of Independence, Mo., in the mass parachute jump by airborne infantrymen.

Rusk's 'chute collided with Cushing's and collapsed in the fall, but Cushing grabbed his companion's sagging 'chute and the two men rode down together on Cushing's parachute.

More than 7000 spectators, including Governor Tuck of Virginia, admirals and generals and congressmen watched the event.

The cadets and midshipmen receiving summer training at Camp Pendleton made up the landing force and boat crews in today's operation.

Rent Decontrol Put On 'Economy Plan'

By the United Press

Housing Expediter Tighe E. Woods said last night that his latest "economy" plan to decontrol rents will be aimed at keeping restrictions tightest on big cities.

These are the areas where the demand for rental housing is greatest, he said. He repeated his statement of Friday that he would ask local advisory boards to police all controlled areas where he cannot afford to maintain paid workers.

Originally Woods announced that he would decontrol one-third of the 1000 so-called "defense rental areas" in which ceilings now exist. The purpose of that plan, announced Wednesday, was to open the way for dismissal of one-third of his workers because his appropriation for the current fiscal year has been slashed 40 per cent.

But when Woods' attorneys studied the law, they found he has no authority to decontrol an area where the demand for rental housing had not been met.

So he abandoned the plan for decontrolling the entire one-third of the areas. As of last night, he did not know how many areas will be decontrolled. He said his seven regional chiefs will announce their progress in this action on Monday at their respective offices. The seven men have been in Washington for the last three days conferring with Woods.

He said his economy plan will follow three "retrenchment" steps.

The first will be "an effort to get within the budget figure by reducing present staffs of the entire agency," Woods said. "We must reduce approximately 2400 employes from our present staff of 5462."

"Our second step," Woods said, is decontrol in every area where it appears that the need for rental housing has been reasonably met."

The third step, he added, "will be to close area rent offices throughout the country if sufficient personnel savings and budget economies are not realized through steps one and two."

"In such cases," he said, "rent control would remain in force, but would be administered through the nearest area office."

Woods said that closing of such offices would be controlled largely by the seriousness of the housing shortage in the area, the proximity of military establishments, colleges and universities, and other factors.

Court Rules U. S. May Sue For Overtime

New York, Aug. 20 (AP).—The Federal Court of Appeals has ruled that the United States Labor Department's wages and hours division may sue employers for back overtime pay even though workers involved do not seek it.

Secretary of Labor Maurice Tobin had asked Congress to pass legislation directly authorizing his department to bring such legal actions, but Congress failed to do so.

The unanimous three-man court decision, written by Judge Charles B. Clark, was filed yesterday. It affirmed a similar judgment granted by the District Court to William R. McComb, wage division administrator.

The earlier ruling had been appealed by Frank Scerbo & Sons, New York office furniture manufacturers. The firm had consented to a permanent injunction restraining it from further failure to pay overtime wages, but it challenged a demand that it make retroactive payments for past overtime.

The court of Appeals decision declared that the company feared that recovery of overtime pay "in equity" would deprive a defendant-employer of a jury trial.

The injunction against the Scerbo firm restrains it from further violations of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 and particularly from failure to pay overtime wages and keep proper records.

Thomas Flays Flexible Price Support Bill

By the United Press

Chairman Elmer Thomas (D., Okla.) of the Senate Agriculture Committee said yesterday he will not back any farm price support program like that which "defeated the Republican Party last year."

Thomas was referring to the flexible price support bill which has been drafted by a subcommittee headed by Senator Clinton P. Anderson (D., N. M.) former Secretary of Agriculture. The Oklahoman announced opposition to that bill Friday and recommended that the existing program, setting price supports at 90 per cent of parity be extended through next year.

Thomas also announced he has invited Secretary of Agriculture Charles F. Brannan and representatives of farm and labor organizations to a public hearing Monday to give their views on the Anderson bill. Brannan already has criticized the bill.

"I couldn't support a program that would reduce farm support prices," Thomas told a reporter. "That's what defeated the Republican Party last year and I'm not going to be a party to that program."

Although he was a member of the subcommittee which drafted the bill, Thomas said today that he had misunderstood what other members wanted to do to the farm parity formula. He said the proposed new formula is based on that in the Republican Aiken law, which would reduce parity prices.

Vote Fraud Cases Against 4 Dropped In Kansas City

Kansas City, Mo., Aug. 20 (U.P.).—Circuit Judge James W. Broaddus today dismissed indictments against four of five men who were charged with vote fraud in the August, 1946, primary balloting.

Henry H. Fox, jr., prosecutor, told Broaddus that in his opinion "it would be impossible to get a conviction in this county" against the four men who were charged with vote fraud in the Aug. 6, 1946, primary election.

The indictments were dismissed against Joseph M. Tanner, at that time a State Representative, Eugene Nigro, Charlie Ferguson, and Harley Taylor. Fox, requested, however, that a charge of "hindering a voter from freely exercising her right of suffrage" be kept on the books against Morris (Snag) Klein.

Amvet Leader Drops Effort to Merge With AVC

By The Associated Press

Harold A. Keats, national commander of Amvets (American Veterans of World War II), said yesterday he has given up trying to merge his group with the American Veterans Committee.

Keats said letters, telegrams and telephone calls from Amvets members have convinced him that "an overwhelming majority of our members are opposed" to the merger.

Joseph Clorety, national vice chairman of AVC, also a World War II veterans group, said AVC still favors the merger, despite "some opposition" among its members.

Nazis, Russia Signed Pact 10 Years Ago

London, Aug. 20 (U.P.).—Russia probably would like to forget all about what happened 10 years ago Sunday night—the world-startling announcement that she would sign a non-aggression pact with Nazi Germany.

They never mention it behind the Iron Curtain any more. But the memory of the pact is kept alive by the Western Powers, who take occasion to recall it from time to time.

At 11 p. m., Monday, August 21, 1939, German radio stations broke into a program of music with a "special message":

"The government of the Reich and the Soviet government have decided to conclude a nonaggression pact with each other. The Reich minister of foreign affairs, Ribbentrop, will arrive in Moscow Wednesday to conclude the negotiations."

On August 23, Nazi Foreign Minister Joachim von Ribbentrop and Soviet Foreign Minister Viacheslav M. Molotov met in the Kremlin to sign a nonaggression pact which left Germany free to touch off World War II.

Nine days later, on September 1, Hitler sent his soldiers into Poland, kindling a war that was to flame for six years and take more than 22 million lives.

Woman Driver Bowls Over Gas Station

San Francisco, Aug. 20 (AP).—A smartly-dressed woman drove her big, flashy automobile briskly into the service station.

Her bumper caught a pop stand and a dozen bottles went flying. The car hit the oil display stand and a tire rack, and oil cans and tires went a-rolling. Then she squarely hit two gas pumps bowled them over—and drove away.

As she passed through, attendant William Wardley told police, she smiled and said, "Hello."

Judd Charges State Dept. Ignored Warning on China

By the United Press

Representative Judd (R., Minn.) yesterday accused the State Department of ignoring a 1945 "top-secret report" disclosing Russian guidance of the Chinese Communists.

The report showed the present Chinese crisis could have been averted, Judd said.

"It is inexcusable that it was allowed to develop," he added.

Judd said he has had the report for four years, but did not feel free to release it until the State Department came out "with all the secret documents which it could find to bolster its own feeble case."

In view of the 1945 report, originally prepared for military intelligence by top military and civilian analysts, Judd said:

Appeasement Charged

"I can only say that Secretary of State Dean Acheson seems determined to make impossible a continuance of the fine bipartisan foreign policy which has been responsible for such foreign policy victories as we have won."

He charged that Acheson has opposed a consistent policy in Asia "where Communism is not just a threat, as in western Europe, but a cruel actuality."

"The decision of Secretary Acheson was to oppose Communism in Europe, but still appease it in Asia," Judd said. "He wants us to pursue the Truman Doctrine in Europe, yet follow the Henry Wallace policy in China."

Judd did not say who prepared the secret report, but released a summary of the text he said was prepared by the analysts who made the report.

It listed these five "most important conclusions" as the situation existed during the war and in 1945:

1. "The democracy of the Chinese Communists is Soviet democracy."

2. "The Chinese Communist movement is part of the international Communist movement, sponsored and aided by Moscow."

Division Opposed

3. "There is reason to believe that Soviet Russia plans to create Russian-dominated areas in Manchuria, Korea and probably north China."

4. "A strong and stable China cannot exist without the natural resources of Manchuria and north China."

5. To prevent separation of Manchuria and north China from China, it is essential not to divide China (like Europe) into occupation zones.

This report was made several months after the Yalta Conference in which Russia already had been assured control of Manchuria, Judd said, although the Yalta "deal" was not then publicly known.

Agency Shifts About Over Until 1950

By The Associated Press

Seven Federal agencies were shifted or streamlined yesterday. That just about completes Government reorganization for this year.

No more major changes are likely until 1950.

Congress and President Truman, by means of five laws and six reorganization plans, have gone part of the way in carrying out the recommendations of the commission headed by former President Herbert Hoover.

Robert L. L. McCormick, director of the Washington office of the Citizens Committee for Reorganization—an outfit created to work for the Hoover Commission's proposals—told a reporter:

"The accomplishments up to now have far exceeded our expectations, but some of the most important legislation is still before us and the road is long."

Here is the score for 1949:

Six reorganization plans took effect yesterday (technically at midnight Friday night).

The United States Employment Service and certain other functions moved into the Labor Department and the Bureau of Public Roads moved into the Commerce Department. No. 1 officials in the Postoffice Department, Civil Service Commission and Maritime Commission got more administrative authority.

The National Security Resources Board and National Security Council became parts of the executive office of the President.

The Reorganization Act of 1949 became law June 20, making possible the six plans that took effect yesterday.

The Military Unification Act became law August 10, giving the Secretary of Defense more power to integrate the armed services.

Another law enacted June 2 already had created the post of Undersecretary of Defense.

The General Services Administration was created by Congress July 1, placing maintenance, purchasing and property disposal agencies of the Government under one roof.

A law enacted May 26 gave the Secretary of State authority to reorganize the State Department.

Certain other proposals were made by the President—including creation of a Department of Welfare and removal of postmaster appointments from politics—but Congress either has killed them or made little progress toward enacting them at this session.

4 Nations Refuse To Take Aid Cuts

Paris, Aug. 20 (U.P.).—The hot potato of allotting Marshall Plan money for 1949-1950 was tossed to a two-man committee today after Britain, France, Holland and Italy all refused to accept the slashing cuts affecting them.

The council, or governing body, of the Organization for European Economic Cooperation charged its chairman — Baron Jean-Charles Snoy of Belgium, and Robert Marjolin, OEEC secretary, with restudying the requests of the participating nations and reporting back with new proposals for division of the funds.

Reliable sources quoted these original requests and tentative allotments:

1. Britain—asked 940 million dollars; allotted 850 million dollars.
2. France—asked 880 million dollars; allotted just under 700 million dollars.
3. Italy—asked for approximately 611 million dollars; allotted just under 400 million dollars.
4. Holland—asked 415 million dollars, then 335 million dollars; allotted about 260 million dollars.

These sources said other bids and recommended shares were:

Country	Asked	Allotted
Bizone Germany ...	$375,000,000	$215,000,000
Denmark	110,000,000	95,000,000
Norway	131,000,000	97,000,000
Ireland	75,000,000	45,000,000
Turkey	112,000,000	30,000,000
Portugal	51,000,000	30,000,000

Sweden's case was so complicated, the sources said, it was impossible to name totals at this time. The sources were not able to name amounts recommended for remaining members of the 19-nation organization.

15 Advisers To Clay Quit McCloy Jobs

Frankfurt, Germany, Aug. 20 (UP)—All but one of the 16 members of former military Governor Gen. Lucius D. Clay's "brain trust have quit since their chief resigned three months ago, a check showed today.

The names of four men in the top pay bricket were added to the growing resignation list this week, after announcement by John J. McCloy, new Military Governor and High Commissioner-designate, of a reorganization plan. Each of the four headed a division which will be placed in a subordinate position under the new setup. They are:

Eugene Grace, Jo Fisher Freeman, James Sundquist and Edward Litchfield.

Lawrence Wilkinson, who is economic adviser was second only to the Military Governor in influence here, has departed. His deputy, Phillips Hawkins, quit at the same time.

Another who will leave soon is Norman H. Collisson, chief of the Economic Cooperation Administration mission to Germany. McCloy, at an August 17 press conference, denied any personal basis for the flood of resignations, and said Collisson had "proclaimed from the housetops" his intention of quitting for the past six months.

Others who have quit since McCloy took over are Brig. Gen. Frank Howley, Military Government chief in Berlin, and Maj. Gen. Clarence L. Adcock, chief American overseer of Bizonia.

At least three of Litchfield's ranking assistants in the Civil Affairs Division will also resign soon. These are John Elliott, Hans Simons and Anthony Pabsch.

The remaining names on the resignation list are Leo Werts, chief of the manpower diviison; Stanley Andres, head of the British-American food and agriculture group, and Lee Spence, boss of the bipartite commerce and industry group.

The only members of Clay's inner circle who has not announced his intention of leaving is J. Anthony Panuch, special adviser to the Military Governor.

German Changeover Set for September

Vast Manhunt On for Sicilian Bandit Gang

Rome, Aug. 20 (AP).—Aroused carabinieri (military police) mobilized a vast man hunt today to crush Italy's public enemy No. 1—Salvatore Giuliano—and his bloody Sicilian bandits.

Giuliano's Montelerre stronghold was under virtual siege following the ambush massacre last night of seven carabinieri and the wounding of 11 others.

Up to noon today, carabinieri had detained 93 persons for questioning. Road blocks clogged mountain roads, and travelers were frisked by heavily armed guards.

Gen. Leonetti Taddei, vice commander of Italy's 65,000 carabinieri, hurriedly left Rome for Palermo to direct action against the bandits.

Thirteen workers at a quarry, near the scene of last night's attack, were among those detained for questioning, the news agency Ansa reported. Ansa said the quarry uses the same type of mine which last night blew up a truckload of carabinieri on a mountain road near Bellolampo, five miles from Palermo.

Bandits hurled hand grenades and sprayed machine-gun bullets at the wrecked truck and its bloody occupants. Only two escaped death or injury.

Germans Hold Secret Talk On Cabinet

Frankfurt, Germany, Aug. 20 (AP).—A secret conference that may go a long way toward determining the cabinet lineup in West Germany's new federal government was held here today.

The conferees were Dr. Konrad Adenauer, chairman of the Conservative Christian Democratic Union (CDU), and Dr. Hans Ehard, Bavarian minister-president (governor). Ehard leads the CDU's southern wing, the Christian Socialist Union (CSU).

The combined CDU-CSU triumphed over the leftist Social Democratic Party (SPD) in last Sunday's federal elections.

The talk was expected to place the finishing touches on a coalition government program Adenauer may present to a meeting of CDU-CSU regional chieftans Sunday.

The Socialists so far have been mum on whether they would be interested in joining a coalition, even if the way were left open. They are planning a meeting of party leaders August 29 at Bad Duerkheim, in the French zone.

Pope Honors Hurley

Vatican City, Aug. 20 (U.P.).—Vatican sources said today that Pope Pius XII had granted Msgr. Joseph P. Hurley the personal rank of Archbishop, and appointed him Bishop of St. Augustine, Fla., for his work as special Vatican envoy to Belgrade, Yugoslavia.

For Islam Bloc

Help Asked Of British By Abdullah

London, Aug. 20 (U.P.).—King Abdullah of Hashemite Jordan is expected to seek support for the creation of a military and political union of all Islamic nations during his conferences with British experts here, informed sources said today.

Abdullah, who arrived here last night, is said to believe that a bloc composed of the Arab countries of the Middle East, Turkey, and Pakistan, would have far greater influence than the present Arab League.

The Islamic bloc subject probably will be discussed with Foreign Minister Ernest Bevin when the future of the Middle East comes under review during Abdullah's three-week stay in London.

Competent quarters here fear that such an ambitious scheme might split the Arab states, rather than knit them closer.

Abdullah Asks U. N. To Censure Israelis

Amman, Hashemite Jordan, Aug. 20 (AP).—King Abdullah's government asked the United Nations today to blame Israel for planting explosives near Jerusalem's holiest places and to have expert sappers dismantle the cache if possible.

The Israelis intended to blow up the dump last Monday, but didn't. The British said Israel would be responsible for any damage done to the nearby Church of the Holy Sepulchre and other relics.

The Jordan government charged the cache near Damascus gate of the old city actually was a "Jewish-planted" mine.

Israeli authorities have said removal of the explosives would be more dangerous than destruction on the spot.

French Forest Fire Stops American Group

Bordeaux, France, Aug. 20 (AP). Forest fires circling Bordeaux today stopped a train with 200 American pilgrims, mostly from New Orleans, en route to the shrine of Lourdes.

The flames reached within 10 miles, but the authorities say they do not consider Bordeaux in imminent danger.

Showdown Near on Bar To Dixiecrats

By The Associated Press

The long-deferred showdown on barring of States' rights Democrats from the regular party organization will come this week.

The issue will be decided in a meeting Wednesday of the Democratic National Committee. It will be the first session of this group since the memorable 1948 convention battle over civil rights and the walkout of several Southern delegations.

The meeting is to elect a successor to Chairman J. Howard McGrath, the Rhode Island Senator who has been confirmed as Attorney General.

William M. Boyle, jr., $30,000 a year executive vice chairman of the committee, is expected to be elected without a contest. He has the approval of President Truman and McGrath.

Therefore, the big fight will come over expulsion or retention of Southern committee members who deserted the Truman ticket last fall in favor of Gov. J. Strom Thurmond of South Carolina, States' rights candidate who fought the President's 10-point program for legislation covering civil rights of minority groups.

Carried Four States

The Thurmond ticket carried the States of South Carolina, Alabama, Louisiana and Mississippi. Mr. Truman has said he is proud of the fact that he won without their support.

Seating of a number of the committee members from those States will be contested. Some compromises may be reached and there is a possibility a seat or two may be left vaacnt.

A contest also is coming from Texas. Byron Skelton of Temple left by air yesterday to "present my credentials of election as Democratic national committeeman from Texas." A State convention last September voted to replace National Committeeman Dwight Morrow of Houston with Skelton. The State executive committee a week later decided to support the action. Morrow was elected at an earlier convention in Brownsville. The Skelton forces claim Morrow did not vigorously support President Truman in the election. Morrow says there is "no truth in the statement that I have not done my best for the Democratic Party in Texas.

Turned Down Ambassadorship

Morrow recently turned down an ambassadorship, saying he wanted to remain in Texas and stay on as national committeeman. He termed the challenge of his party regularity a "tempest in a teapot."

Broadcasters Ready to Defy U. S. Ban on Giveaway Shows

New York, Aug. 20 (U.P.).—The Nation's broadcasters, convinced that 30 million listeners can't be wrong, indicated today that they will defy a Government ban on giveaway shows until the courts make a binding decision.

The point to be decided is this: Are the radio quiz shows, which award millions annually in merchandise, cash and trips, to be classified as lotteries, or are they just entertainment?

The Federal Communications Commission in a ruling yesterday said a good many of the shows, especially those offering the biggest jackpots to participants at home, are lotteries. The broadcasters are convinced they are legal. The United States Supreme Court may have to give the final answer.

Although the ban is to become effective October 1, the broadcasters plan to start legal proceedings at once, so that enforcement probably will be delayed for many months.

Storm-Lashed Ships Disabled in Atlantic

Halifax, Aug. 20 (AP)—A third ship called for help today in violent winds and rains that slashed at the coast of Nova Scotia.

The 71-foot fishing boat, Rhode Island, radioed that it was drifting disabled 5 miles off Boars Head on the south coast. At the same time, aid was being rushed to a Pan-American freighter and a Latvian refugee schooner on the stormy Atlantic.

The three vessels were caught in a storm that tore pleasure yachts and fishing boats from their moorings. No lives were reported lost.

Yale Plans to Publish Oldest Biblical Texts, Found by Goatherds in Cave Near Dead Sea

New Haven, Conn., Aug. 20 (AP). Some of the oldest-known Biblical texts soon will be available for study by scholars throughout the world.

Found accidently by Arab Goatherds in a cave near the Dead Sea, the documents were brought to this country and photographed by scholars here. Plans for publishing the photographic record and a transcription were announced today by the American Schools of Oriental Research at Yale University.

The most ancient complete biblical manuscript ever found—a copy of the Book of Isaiah—will be included in a volume now in preparation. It will be published in the fall.

Other volumes will follow.

The documents are among those found in a cave in Palestinian territory, now occupied by the Arab Legion of King Abdullah of Heshemite Jordan. Two Arab goatherds made the original discovery about two years ago while fighting was raging in Palestine.

Eight scrolls of animal skin on which Hebrew characters were written were discovered by the Bedouins in a hillside cave near the Dead Sea.

Four scrolls were brought to the United States by their owner, Metropolitan Anthanasius Yeshue Samuel, of the Syrian Orthodox Monastery of St. Mark in Jerusalem. These are the manuscripts being published here.

The other four scrolls are in possession of the Hebrew University on Mount Scopus in Jerusalem.

Months after the original find, the cave was rediscovered by a detachment of the Arab Legion. A group of English archaeologists recovered fragments of other scrolls now in the British Museum in London.

Prof. Carl H. Kraeling, president of the American Schools of Oriental Research, said the texts brought to this country date back more than 2000 years to the first and second centuries before Christ.

"The American Schools of Oriental Research are now using their good offices to make the material in the United States available to all scholars in Israel and England, or anywhere else, who have portions of these ancient Hebrew manuscripts at hand," said Professor Kraeling.

"The new findings, including the material in this country, are even more ancient than the famous Nash papyrus, which heretofore was the oldest Biblical fragment."

Professor Kraeling said the manuscripts showed the ravages of time but the ancient Hebrew characters were easily read.

"These manuscripts tell us a good deal about the reliability of the traditional Hebrew text of the Bible," said Professor Kraeling. "They show us that ancient variations do not significantly change the reading of the text.

"The material which has been found to be supplementary to the Biblical text—hymns, rules of discipline of a sect, and materials here and abroad—tells us a great deal we have not known heretofore about this phase of Jewish history.

"We do have many apocryphal books in existence, but this new information supplements our information tremendously."

Professor Kraeling said a political emergency, possibly an invasion by Romans, may have caused ancient Hebrews to hide the sacred texts, or that the cave was a "Genizah," a place used by Hebrews to store sacred documents after they outlived their usefulness.

It was forbidden to destroy holy writ, so the ancient Jews would give worn-out manuscripts a reverent burial.

Militia Are Refused By Dewey in Strike

Buffalo, N. Y., Aug. 20 (AP).—Gov. Thomas E. Dewey refused today to use State Police or militia to handle what the Bell Aircraft Corp. and a sheriff have termed "lawlessness" at Bell's struck plant.

Lawrence D. Bell, company president, and Henry E. Becker, Niagara County sheriff, teamed yesterday in asking Dewey to send the State Guard or State Police to handle the situation.

From Albany Dewey wired Becker that the officer had "complete and unlimited power to deputize any number" of men.

Dewey added that "I shall hold you strictly accountable for any failure" to "discharge your responsibilities."

Edward F. Gray, United Auto Workers subregional director, told the Governor: "Mr. Bell's hysterical charges are utterly false and without any foundation in fact." He asked for a State investigation.

The pleas followed a demonstration in which strikers marched through the plant.

Robert V. Siegler, president of UAW Local 501, was arrested, meanwhile, on charges of third-degree assault and disorderly conduct. Siegler was accused of leading the parade and pushing one of the workers. He pleaded not guilty and was released in bail pending a hearing.

4500 Ore Miners Strike in Alabama

Birmingham, Ala., Aug. 20 (AP). Ore mining operations of the Tennessee Coal, Iron and Railroad Co. came to a halt after two more pits were shut down in a workload dispute today.

Between 4500 and 5000 miners were idle. Eight mines, a limestone plant and dolomite quarry were affected. Any lengthy mine tieup eventually could affect the entire TCI operation, which employs about 30,000 workers.

The miners are members of the United Steel Workers of America (CIO). R. E. Farr, union director, said the diggers complained that their workload had been increased.

Machinist Chief Sails For Europe on Priority

New York, Aug. 20 (AP).—Harvey W. Brown, former president of the International Association of Machanists, headed for Europe today on an undisclosed mission.

Cunard White Star Line officials said he boarded the Queen Elizabeth shortly before sailing time after obtaining passage with "an A-1 U. S. Army priority." His destination was listed as Cherbourg.

In Steel Dispute

C. of C. Aide Links Boosts To Layoffs

New York, Aug. 20 (AP).—The economic research director for the U. S. Chamber of Commerce has told presidential fact-finders in the steel industry that a fourth-round wage boost probably would lead to more unemployment.

Dr. Emerson P. Schmidt, appearing in behalf of the steel companies, said yesterday—profits have begun to shrink and that many firms simply don't have the money to pay higher wages.

He said that "even in normal prosperous years," only about half of American corporations make a taxable profit.

"At present," he added, "a growing number of companies are moving into the red. They have no profits which could be converted into wage costs."

He said a "substantial fourth round of wage increases at present is less likely to mean higher prices and is more likely to lead to prompt layoffs and disemployment."

The three-man fact-finding board, set up by President Truman to recommend terms for averting a general steel strike, agreed to hear Schmidt only after the companies granted him part of their time. The board ruled the U. S. Chamber could not present testimony as an individual organization.

The CIO United Steel Workers, demanding a 30-cent-an-hour increase in wages, social insurance and pensions, has three days for rebuttal after the companies complete their case. Then the companies will wind up the hearing with a one-day reply.

The board's recommendations won't be abinding on either side, but will be offered as a basis for settlement in negotiations before the union's new strike deadline of September 16.

C. M. White, president of Republic Steel Co., one of the Nation's big steel firms, laid a blunt challenge before the union: He said strikes were a "hell of a good way" to work out disputes, even if strikes are bad.

He said trying to settle disputes through such means as the fact-finding board was worse. He said he didn't think the board had any place in American economy.

Odds Against Strike at Ford Next 14 Days

Detroit, Aug. 20 (AP).—Don't look for a Ford strike for another week or two at least. The odds favor a continuation of the "cold war" on the automotive labor front.

CIO strategy apparently calls for the auto workers to lie low for quite a while yet.

Here's why, according to labor and industry dopesters:

The three-man panel studying a similar dispute in the steel industry presumably won't report to President Truman before September 1, at the earliest.

Strike Could Be Averted

Until then—barring a leak—neither Ford nor the CIO United Auto Workers will know what that panel will recommend.

If it comes out for pensions or a substantial wage boost for steel workers it might even win union demands in the auto industry without a major strike.

If the panel recommends little or no benefits it would knock the props from under any union on strike over economic issues when the report comes up early next month. It's doubtful the auto workers, under shrewd President Walter Reuther, would be caught in such a position.

If they consider it necessary, the auto workers might strike Ford during the first two weeks in September. This is somewhat more likely than a strike before then.

But every day of inaction makes it seem more probable the steelworkers will set the pace in contract negotiations this year.

Printers Vote to Stay Away From NLRB Jurisdiction

Oakland, Calif., Aug. 20 (AP)—The International Typographical Union closed its 91st annual convention today committed for another year to stay outside National Labor Board jurisdiction.

The printers again refused to order its officers to sign the non-Communist affidavits required to place the union under NLRB procedure.

The union also:

1. Rejected a resolution by members of the San Francisco local which has been under fire for signing a memorandum agreement short of ITU contract standards. The motion would have instructed ITU officers to stop using union publications for "unwarranted articles" against opponents within the union.
2. Submitted to union referendum an increase in the salaries of the president and secretary treasurer from $10,000 to $12,000 a year; vice president from $7,500 to $9,500.
3. Rejected a one-union proposal for the whole printing industry.
4. Directed more cooperation with allied printing crafts.
5. Refused to solicit other unions for strike funds.
6. Voted to intensify ITU activity in Canada.

President Woodruff Randolph told the convention he opposed the move to force officers to sign non-Communist affidavits because it would place the union under NLRB regulation.

"We don't want to use these procedures. We have not from the beginning and we do not now," he said.

The union has been adamant in its fight against the Taft-Hartley Act under which the NLRB now operates. It has refused to sign contracts which do not give it full union benefits. Pending before the NLRB now are 10 complaints charging the union with unfair labor practices growing out of this stand. The union has been enjoined in Indianapolis Federal District Court from violating the Taft-Hartley Act.

Ching Summons Conference Here on Hawaii Dock Strike

By the United Press

The Government soon will invite company and union officials to meet here for a new effort to settle the 112-day-old Hawaiian dock strike, it was learned last night.

Government labor experts said the invitation will be sent by Mediation Director Cyrus S. Ching early this week—probably Monday.

The Hawaii strike, now nearly four months old, has crippled the island's economy. It was called by the left-wing International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union (CIO) to enforce demands for a wage increase.

Both the union and the struck companies asked Ching to go to Hawaii. But Ching, it was learned, feels he cannot leave because of threatened strikes in the steel, coal and auto industries.

Decides on Talks Here

The mediation director has decided, instead, to invite officials of the union and the companies to resume their bargaining conferences here.

Injunctions Asked In Hawaiin Strike

Honolulu, Aug. 20 (AP)—Hawaii's Attorney General today sought both temporary and permanent injunctions to restrain striking CIO longshoremen from picketing or otherwise interfering with any Government stevedore operation in Honolulu.

Circuit Judge Edward A. Towse signed an order for the union to show cause why a temporary injunction should not be issued. He set a hearing for Tuesday afternoon.

The same judge already had set a hearing for Wednesday on a narrower injunction issue: ordering the union and a number of John Does to show cause why they should not be held in contempt for violating an injunction against picketing the freighter Hawaiian Merchant.

Meanwhile, Mayor John H. Wilson asked United States Attorney General-designate McGrath and six Democratic Senators to urge Cyrus Ching, Federal Labor Conciliator, to come to Hawaii to mediate the strike.

Harry Bridges, president of the CIO International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union, whose 2000 stevedores have been on strike for 112 days, left last night by air for San Francisco. He said he probably would return to Hawaii next week. Onlookers at the airport booed as he departed.

The strikers, who went out May 1, demanding a 32-cent raise in their $1.40 hourly wage, adopted a resolution last night calling on President Truman to remove Gov. Ingram M. Stainback.

The Governor called a special session of the Territorial Legislature which on August 6 passed a special act putting the Territory into the stevedore business to try to end the paralysis of Hawaiian commerce.

This special session went into a three-week recess yesterday.

The Isthmian freighter Thomas Cresap, one of the first ships unloaded by the Government, sailed last night for Long Beach, Calif., in ballast. An ILWU spokesman said it would be a "hot ship" on arrival.

U.S. May Modernize Trunk Line Roads

NYHT News Service

An $11,266,000,000 improvement program for the nation's 37,800-mile trunk highway system to make it adequate to serve both peace and wartime needs is now under Congressional consideration.

The Bureau of Public Roads, transferred yesterday to the Department of Commerce, has urgently recommended the program to start at once, and to involve expenditure of at least $500 million a year to bring up to modern standards both rural and city highways in the country's trucking lifeline, which became frayed during the war years.

"Large portions of the system," the Bureau reported, "are seriously obsolence and are not suitable, either in surface conditions or in design, for the great number of vehicles attempting to use them. Present overcrowding of arterial routes is because traffic in postwar years has increased faster than the rate of highway improvement."

The half-billion-dollar-a-year estimate is based on the need for improving every one of the 37,800 miles of the system over a period of 20 years. National defense needs, the bureau added grimly after consultation with the Military Establishment, "require a substantially more rapid improvement." Present road-building spending on the system runs to only about 75 million dollars a year.

In addition, from the defense standpoint, the bureau recommends stockpiling of at least six months supply of road-building materials and equipment and a "substantial stock" of portable bridge units against the possibility of war. Such reserves would be held by State highway units for use in civil disaster relief.

In the normal reconstruction, aside from war or peace emergencies, the Bureau has recommended that Congress consider providing more than the present 50 per cent matching of Federal with State funds on the arterial routes.

The highway system now is most deficient in sight distances and in the width of pavements, shoulders and bridges, the report states, noting that while improvements can—and have been deferred to some extent—"deferral means the acceptance of greater costs in lives, in convenience and in the actual expense of vehicle operation."

Completion of proposed improvements in a shorter period than 20 years, in addition to providing for potential war needs, would result in great economic and social benefits, the Bureau asserts.

3 Services' Planes Set For Air Show

NYHT News Service

About 150 Air Force, Navy and Marine Corps aircraft of the latest type will take part in the National Air Races program at Cleveland over Labor Day weekend as a "Department of Defense team," Defense Secretary Johnson announce yesterday.

He said they will be supplemented by more tahn 500 members of Cleveland's 7th Marine Reserve Battalion.

These troops will be flown in by the Marine Corps from Camp LeJeune, N. C., on the opening day for a combined air-ground assault on Municipal Airport, simulating the attack on Iwo Jima.

This phase of the show will be climaxed by reenactment of the famous flag-raising ceremony that was one of the highlights of the war in the Pacific.

Air National Guard Lockheed jet fighters will be entered in the Allison Trophy race from Indianapolis to Cleveland on the second day of the meet, Johnson said, while regular Air Force F-84 Republic jet fighters will participate in the Bendix Derby from California to Cleveland on the opening day.

Four North American F-86S, the Air Force's fastest jet fighters, will fly in a special jet division of the last-day Thompson Trophy race.

The Air Force will stage also a daily "fly by" of its latest-type aircraft. This will be led by 27 Boeing B-29 Superfortresses followed by 3 Consolidated-Vultee six-engine Intercontinental bombers.

All three flying services will put on demonstrations of dive-bombing and acrobatic flying. The Navy will be represented by craft ranging from its colossal Lockheed Constitution transport and Martin Mars and Mercator flying boats to its latest-type McDonnell Banshee jet fighters.

For the first time, the Navy's famous Blue Angels acrobatic flying team will perform in jet fighters instead of conventional aircraft. Another daily feature of the meet will be a speed run between a World War II North American Mustang and the Air Force's latest and fastest type in this field, a North American F-86 jet.

witness when hearings are resumed Tuesday.

The story Senators told reporters yesterday about Vaughan's alleged intercession over allocation of grains to brewers and distillers in 1946 did not go into detail. It was not brought out exactly what the general wanted the Department of Agriculture to do about the matter. In substance the account related by the Senators was as follows:

During the postwar food shortage in 1946 Vaughan, the Senators said, called Secretary Anderson to ascertain whether a change was contemplated in regulations limiting the use of grains by brewers and distillers. Anderson reportedly replied that there would be no change unless the grain scarcity became more acute. As it turned out, the Senators explained, that is what happened. And the regulations were tightened.

One Senator said he understood that Vaughan thereafter got a telephone call from a person in Milwaukee representing brewery interests, complaining about the new regulations.

The general, according to the Senator, then tried to call Secretary Anderson but talked to Koenig instead because the Secretary was out of town.

The Senator said that Vaughan complained to Koenig that Secretary Anderson had given the White House certain information about his plans for grain allocation and had then changed the plans without notifying the White House. Vaughan reportedly let Koenig know that this sort of thing did not please him in the least.

The general's language was characterized as "abusive."

Some time after the call, it is understood, Koenig and Anderson discussed the matter, but the regulation was allowed to stand.

An officer on duty in Vaughan's office said yesterday that Vaughan would not comment on this or any other phase of the investigation. He said the general would comment on all the cases in which his name has been mentioned when he testifies before the committee.

Arsenic Death Laid to Woman

Memphis, Tenn., Aug. 20 (U.P.). A 27-year-old housewife, whose parents died mysteriously, was arrested today on a charge of killing her mother by arsenic poisoning.

Mrs. Clarice Spurlock, a buxom brunette, was taken into custody here with her husband on a trip from their home in Evansville, Ind.

She said the charge was a "surprise" to her. Dressed in a tight yellow sweater and gray slacks, she expressed virtually no concern.

In reply to a question, Mrs. Spurlock put her finger in her mouth and smiled coyly.

Husband Is Upset

Her husband, Arleigh Spurlock, 39, who last year suffered a mysterious, lingering illness, was so upset by the arrest that he was unable to sign his name to police records.

Indiana police wanted Mrs. Spurlock for questioning about the death of her father. They also sought further information about her husband's illness.

Mrs. Eunice Irene Dearing,, 56, the mother, died last Nov. 15 at an Evansville hospital. Winter Dearing, 59, the father, died April 5 after living in the Spurlock home. A sheriff said his death was "mysterious."

Death by Arsenic

The Indiana University Medical Center reported yesterday that Mrs. Dearing died of arsenic poisoning.

Sheriff Frank McDonald at Indianapolis said he learned that Mrs. Dearing had a $1500 life insurance policy naming her husband and Mrs. Spurlock as beneficiaries. He said Dearing later assigned his share of the policy to his daughter. Five days before Dearing died, McDonald said he made a will leaving his estate to Mrs. Spurlock.

Poisoning Suspected As 2 in Family Die

Jacksonville, Ill., Aug. 20 (U.P.).—A bitter argument over a tractor preceded the deaths of two members of a farm family and the critical illness of a third from suspected arsenic poisoning, an official investigation revealed today.

Morgan County officials questioned surviving members of John Bruening's family about the quarrel.

A son, Marvin, 20, died July 1, and a daughter-in-law, Mrs. Marie Bruening, 24, died Thursday. Bernard Bruening, her husband, and the older son, fought for his life at Passvant Hospital here. He was stricken yesterday

A coroner's jury ruled that Marvin Bruening died of arsenic poisoning.

Authorities said that Mr. and Mrs. Buening both suffered from sore throats and burning sensations in the mouth, usual symptoms of arsenic poisoning.

Eugene Black in Paris

Paris, Aug. 20 (U.P.) — Eugene Black, president of the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development, arrived here from New York by air today for financial talks with French officials.

Petain Improving

Paris, Aug. 20 (U.P.) —Former Marshal Henri Philippe Petain, 93, was reported virtually recovered today after suffering a sharp decline in health during the July heat wave.

School Makes D. C. Tops in Psychiatry

One Washington institution today bears out the old principle that it really takes only two things to make a school—the mind of the teachers and the mind of the students.

A campus is not needed; nor a stein song; nor an athletic field. Even classrooms and lecture halls are unnecessary.

The Washington School of Psychiatry has little more than the mental ingredients. But already it has begun to make Washington as dominant in the field of psychiatry as Vienna and Freud were at the century's turn.

The formal establishment which has done most to spread "Washington psychiatry" is at 1711 Rhode Island ave. nw., but the visitor there will find only a business office, a school library, and the editor's desk for the school journal, Psychiatry.

172 Physicians Attend

The school, however, had 460 students last year, including 172 physicians. Others were social workers, teachers, psychologists, counselors, nurses, clergymen, writers, lawyers, ocupational therapists and even economists. At least 70 per cent of the student body held a master's or higher degree.

The students and faculty of 40 minds comprise the School of Psychiatry, whose classrooms are the homes and offices of the teachers and whose lecture halls are arranged for only when the occasional need arises.

This fall, the school will begin its fourteenth year with even more courses than the 46 it offered last year.

The Washington School of Psychiatry is the product of the late Dr. William Alanson White, for many years superintendent of St. Elizabeths Hospital and his associate, Dr. Harry Stack Sullivan, who died last January in Paris.

Dr. White is credited with beginning the movement to pry psychiatry from the clinic and broaden it to cover all phases of human living. He saw psychiatry, not as just the study of mental disorders, but the study of interpersonal relations.

Shock Therapy Minimized

The story of the growth of the school is the story of local psychiatrists working to further this concept. Their success is seen in the increasing submergence of the Freudian concept that sex is the sole motivating factor in life.

"Washington psychiatry," as the concept is known throughout the profession, shuns the Freudian base for the more encompassing field of psychoanalysis. Its followers oppose psychosurgery, such as lobotomies, except as a last resort. They frown also on the wholesale practice of shock therapy.

Primary function of the Washington school is to train doctors in psychoanalysis. To qualify for work in the field, the graduate must not only have completed years of medical training, but also must have undergone 300 hours of psychoanalysis on himself. In addition, he must spend another 300 hours psychoanalyzing others under supervision of a qualified psychoanalyst.

But the Washington school, by the very nature of the science it has developed, requires the collaboration of specialists in other social sciences. It is for this reason the school offers corollary courses in sociology, social psychology, anthropology and political science.

It was Dr. Sullivan who pressed continually for inclusion of such studies as sociology and anthropology so that the psychiatrist-in-training could increase his understanding of interpersonal relations.

The emphasis in other fields led to establishment of curricula for professions other than psychiatry. Thus psychiatry was made available for ministers, lawyers, social workers and others to increase the effectiveness of their work in their own fields.

The courses are scheduled for groups of 8 to 10 students, obviating any need for formal classrooms, school officials explained.

And as to a campus, a stein song, college colors or a college yell, the school is quite content to stick to things of the mind.

Peanut Aid Cost Zooms

000 last year. The new law provides that next year the Government goal may be not less than 2,100,000.

Before the war the acreage ran about 1,500,000 to 1,600,000.

But although acreage has been reduced, most experts do not believe it has been reduced as much as world demand for American peanuts or peanut oils. This reduction has been further increased by the shortage of dollars in countries most in need of fats and oils imports.

The House recently adopted a measure to continue the present high price supports. Such informed observers see the cost of supporting peanut prices zooming still more next year.

Shanghai Reds Set Up New Labor Code

Shanghai, Aug. 20 (U.P.).—Communist occupation authorities today published a new labor code for this captured city, banning strikes and limiting management's control of production and employment policies.

Business and industrial quarters said that the new regulations would ease the labor-management friction which has hampered Shanghai's factories in recent months.

Police Identify Body Of Drowned Man

The body of a man identified from fingerprints as John A. Jordan, 47, of no fixed address, was recovered early yesterday from the Potomac River at the foot of 30th st. nw.

No. 1 Rescue Squad, which pulled the man out, removed nim to Emergency Hospital where he was pronounced dead. Police said they believe he suffered a heart attack and fell from the seawall. The body is unclaimed at the District Morgue.

$2522 Donated For Memorial To Dr. Wilbur

Two monetary gifts, totaling $2522.57, for a William Allen Wilbur memorial room at George Washington University Hospital were announced yesterday by GWU officials.

Dr. Wilbur, former dean of GWU's Columbian College and for 38 years head of its English department, died in 1945 at the age of 80. He had retired in 1935.

One of the gifts—$1100—came from Dr. Syngman Rhee, president of Korea, who was graduated from GWU in 1907. The other—$1422.57—was from members of Calvary Baptist Church, 8th and H sts. nw., where Dr. Wilbur taught a Bible class for nearly 30 years.

Tribesmen Chant Welcome As 'White Queen' Arrives

Francistown, British Bechuanaland, Aug. 20 (AP).—The 24-year-old British former typist who some day may be white queen of the Bamangwato tribe arrived by plane from England today for her first View of her African husband's domain.

Tribesmen danced and sang their welcome in apparent disregard of the squabble kicked up by their elder statesmen over Chief-Designate Seretse Khama's marriage to the blonde English girl, Ruth Williams. Some elders went into exile rather than accept her.

The small European colony knew she was coming—although she traveled incognito as Mrs. Jones—but they showed no interest in her arrival.

Her husband was late getting to the little airstrip.

Wearing a pink, flowery new look frock, Ruth waited alone for some time until Seretse drove up in the blue automobile he bought her as a wedding present.

The black and white couple embraced warmly. They were married while he was studying law in England.

There were no police or government officials in the welcoming party.

Seretse chose a European-style house rather than a clay hut for their first tea. Hundreds of tribesmen gathered around, chanting and dancing.

The 27-year-old Chief Designate then drove her to Serowe, capital of the 100,000 Bamangwatos, 100 miles away.

Tonight the couple stopped at the home of a white trader in Palapye, midway between Francistown and Serowe.

When they reach Serowe a modern home awaits them. Seretse has obtained a home owned formerly by a British official and has spared no expense in equipping it with radio, electric refrigerator and other up-to-the-minute conveniences.

Mammoth Exhumed In Arctic Russia

Moscow, Aug. 20 (U.P.).—A scientific expedition to the frozen wastes of Arctic Russia has completed exhumation of a giant mammoth recently found embedded in the ice of the Taimyr Peninsula, it was announced today.

The well-preserved animal was estimated to have lived 12,000 years ago.

Dice Loser's Wife Goes on Rampage, Shoots Up Game

Los Angeles, Aug. 20 (AP)—An angry housewife complaining about her husband's gambling losses shot up a neighborhood dice game last night, police reported.

Her son joined in the fracas. Both were arrested. Detective Sergt. C. W. Barber said Vance Cushman, 41, and some friends were having a little game in Fred Barnett's upholstery shop. Mrs. Cushman and her son, William, 19, appeared at the place.

She said "I want the $200 my husband lost," and when Barnett said he didn't have it she fired two wild shots. Her son belabored Barnett with a rubber mallet and a spray gun.

Later Mrs. Cushman, 40, and William were seized and booked on suspicion of assault with intent to commit murder. Barnett was hospitalized with face and head lacerations.

Picture Taken By Navy Jet at 48,846 Feet

A picture of Washington taken at an altitude of 48,846 feet—believed to be a record as far as pictures of the Capital are concerned—have been taken from a Navy Banshee jet fighter.

The plane itself reached an altitude of 52,000 feet last week over the city, it has been disclosed.

The British Vampire jet fighter is reported to have reached an altitude of 59,000 feet. The Air Force has reported that its X-1 rocket plane has gone higher than 59,000 feet. But it has never claimed anything higher than a 45,000 foot service ceiling for its jet fighters.

The picture taken over Washington, which is expected to be released by the Navy this week, was taken with a new aerial camera developed by the Navy. The prints, 9 by 9 inches, which cover an 11-square-mile area, are said to be comparatively clear.

The White House, the Capitol, the Pentagon, National Airport and other landmarks can be seen distinctly without a magnifying glass, it was reported.

90-Year-Old Shells Bang At Ft. Sumter

Charleston, S. C., Aug. 20 (AP).—The roar of exploding Union and Confederate artillery shells again echoed against the historic ramparts of Fort Sumter today as deactivation of ammunition began.

The explosions punctuated brief ceremonies attended by some of the country's top military men at the opening of a Nation-wide effort to rid homes of dangerous war trophies.

The shells, although buried for almost 90 years, still packed a terrific wallop.

After being "sniffed out" by mine detectors, the shells were exhumed by an Army team from Fort Bragg.

A detail under command of Lieut. W. R. Brooks of the Naval Explosive Ordnance Disposal School at Indian Head, Md., blew up the shells.

The campaign started here will be carried out gradually throughout the Nation. Even Gettysburg and Fort Pulaski will be swept for dangerous ordnance.

Virginian Held In Murder Of Spiritualist

Baltimore, Aug. 20 (AP).—A 36-year-old man from Harrisonburg, Va., was held here today for questioning in connection with the strange killing of Mrs. Emma Kefalos, a spiritualist.

It was the first arrest in the case since the 55-year-old medium was found trussed and strangled August 8 in her raspberry-tinted apartment.

The man was booked as "held for investigation." He was picked up last night on the waterfront, near the spiritualist's apartment.

Mrs. Kafalos, a widow, turned to spiritualism several years ago. She gave frequent seances and apparently had many prosperous clients.

Her body was found by a neighbor. She was strangled with an electric cord and her apartment was ransacked.

Police found many of the trappings of the supernatural trade in the apartment, including a crystal ball and a voodoo death curse.

Although many persons have been questioned, the Harrisonburg man was the first to be arrested.

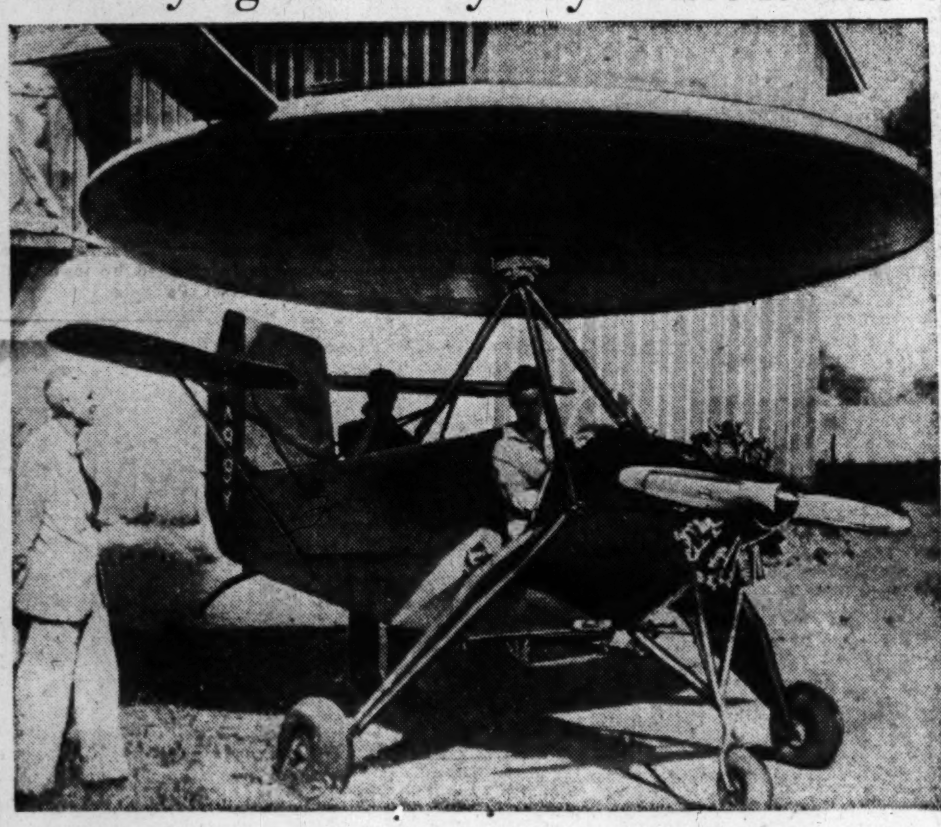
Air Force Now Decides Odd Maryland Relics Leave Flying Saucer Mystery Where It Was



Associated Press WIREPHOTO

FLYING (SAUCER) MACHINE—Inventor Jonathan E. Caldwell (left) is shown with his rotor plane in this 1940 photograph. Remains of the airplane were found near Glen Burnie, Md. Officials call it the "granddaddy" of "flying saucers." Other two men are unidentified

The two-year old flying saucer mystery is still a mystery. The discovery Friday of a "saucer"-rotored helicopter and a flying tub didn't solve it at all, the Air Force said yesterday.

Widespread interest in the two 10-year-old tattered brainchildren of a Maryland stock promoter was originally triggered by an enthusiastic Air Force investigator on the scene, who called them "definite prototypes" of flying saucers.

Yesterday however, the Air Force admitted that it was no closer to solution of the origin of the whirling discs than it was last April, when it issued its last statement.

It said yesterday that "the two experimental aircraft found near Baltimore, Md., have absolutely no connection with the reported phenomena of 'flying saucers'."

In its statement of last April, the Air Force said: "Many of the reported instances have been definitely determined to be meteorological balloons, or natural celestial phenomena. However, there are some instance reported by reliable and competent observers which are still unexplained."

Following a policy of investigating all reports, Bolling Field investigators, together with Maryland State police, traced a tip to the Glen Burnie, Md., farm where the rotting machines were found.

The inventor, one Jonathan E. Caldwell, had disappeared 10 years ago after he had been enjoined from selling stock in the "Grey Goose Airways." He was 60 years old at the time.

An airport repairman, John W. Ganz, told the investigators he helped Caldwell build the contraptions.

Air Force belief in the possibility that Caldwell's machines were original models for the flying saucers went far enough to cause a Nation-wide alert to be sent out for the inventor, a United Press dispatch said.

The news agency said investigators wanted to find out if Caldwell had built better models in the past 10 years.

Defendant's Name Slips Character Witness' Mind

Omaha, Aug. 20 (AP).—Deputy County Attorney Robert McGowan was questioning a man about a shooting.

Suddenly he paused and asked: "Say, haven't I seen you before? Didn't you testify for the defense in a murder trial some time ago?"

"Yes, I did," the man answered. "I was a character witness for the man who was supposed to have done the killin'."

"Who was he?" McGowan asked.

"I can't remember," said the man. "I didn't know him very well."

New Red Attack Threat to Canton

Canton, Sunday, Aug. 21 (AP)—Chinese Communist troops today were attacking a city whose fall would cut off Canton from the stronghold of Hengyang, 265 miles to the north.

The city is Leiyang, 35 miles south of Hengyang on the railroad which leads to Canton. Official reports admitted that Red troops moving down from the east had attacked Leiyang's outskirts.

Civilians were fleeing from Leiyang in large numbers. The Lei River stands between the Communists and the city proper. The official reports said the Reds put a regiment across the river but it was wiped out.

The fall of Leiyang would cut off any retreat toward this refugee capital of the main forces of Gen. Pai Chung-hsi, commander on the front north of Canton.

Pai's escape southwestward into his old province of Kwangsi still is intact, but the Communists were reported regrouping on that part of the front after a setback.

On the southeastern seaboard, Red troops, by official accounts, were moving south toward Amoy.

The Ministry of National Defense issued a statement saying the Nationalists were determined to defend Lanchow, capital of Kansu Province on the front in far northwest China.

Small Communist forces were reported probing the city's defenses from many directions. But the main forces were 20 to 30 miles away.

The government was reported throwing strong reinforcements into the Communist advance 170 miles northeast of Canton.

Navy Fighter Pilot Dies as Plane Crashes

Creedmore, N. C., Aug. 20 (AP).—A Navy fighter plane crashed near here today, killing an unidentified pilot and scattering the wreckage over a 150-yard area. A witness said she heard the pilot screaming in the plane.

Mrs. A. B. Brown said the plane flew over her tobacco barn at treetop level about 2 p.m. She said the motor was sputtering and the pilot was screaming.

It was reported that the plane was based at the Norfolk, Va., naval air station. The name of the pilot was being withheld until the next of kin were notified.

Bishop Moore Asks Rebirth of Religion

Massanetta Springs, Va., Aug. 20 (AP).—Bishop Arthur J. Moore, of Atlanta, said here today the crisis in the world's life is in large measure due to our moral and spiritual failure.

'Our spirituality has been too shallow, and our efforts to Christianize our civilization have been too superficial," he told the Bible Conference here. "We must become deeply concerned about the spiritual ideals of our people."

Bishop Moore stated that "hope lies in a rebirth of religion, if we are to continue with liberty and compassion in our viens."

He stated that "we are in danger of breeding a new type of human being, hollow men with no inner life, wholly concerned with external and material things, which his soul is ridden with fear and frustration."

Bishop Moore said that if the church does not leaven the world, the world will leaven the church.

With three services scheduled Sunday, thousands are expected to drive to Massanetta Springs. Speakers on Sunday's program include Bishop Edwin Holt Hughes, of Washington; Bishop Moore; Dr. J. Sidlow Baxter of Edinburgh, Scotland; Dr. P. E. Miller of Druid Hills Presbyterian Church, Atlanta, and Dr. Roy L. Smith of Chicago.

A feature will be memorial service honoring the late Dr. Peter Marshall of Washington. The 105-voice choir of the New York Avenue Presbyterian Church in the Nation's Capital will give a memorial concert at 3:30 p. m.

Leonard will represent the First District of the association which covers most of the East Coast. The association, which was organized in 1947, is planning to establish a legislative headquarters in Washington.

Falling Tool Kills Navy Flier's Mother

Tulsa, Okla., Aug. 20 (AP).—A 50-year-old woman died early today after being hit on the head by a wrench which slipped from a workman's belt and dropped 400 feet.

She was Mrs. J. A. Rankin, mother of Commander Eugene P. Rankin of the United States Naval Academy at Annapolis. The commander was co-pilot of the Truculent Turtle, the Navy plane which set a nonstop record last year in a flight from Australia to Columbus, Ohio.

Mrs. Rankin died of a fractured skull and loss of blood after the wrench hit her yesterday. The five-pound tool bounced off a ledge after dropping 20 stories and struck her, then crashed through a store window.

The workman, Ward Penturf, 27, was on top of the National Bank of Tulsa building helping to install a television antenna. He told police the wrench slipped out of his belt when he stooped over to work.

Police termed the death a freak accident.

Klansmen March Unmasked, Wear Dark Glasses

Pell City, Ala., Aug. 20 (U.P.).—Ku Klux Klansmen tonight displayed their answer to Alabama's new anti-mask law.

They wore dark glasses.

About 60 robed and hooded Klan members paraded through this small community in the first Alabama Klan demonstration since masks were banned two months ago.

The klansmen tucked the face covers of their hoods behind their ears. More than half wore dark glasses.

After a 17-car caravan had paraded noisily three times down the thronged main thoroughfare, the Klansmen gathered at the courthouse to hear Dr. Lycurgus, retired Baptist minister who last year was defeated for governor of Mississippi. He congratulated the Klansmen for conducting their parade in a lawful manner.

Homecomer Sneaks Himself Into Jam

New York, Aug. 20 (U.P.).—Lawrence Sandusky, 52, didn't want his family to know he was coming in late, so he tried to climb into his third-floor bedroom window from the roof early today.

His leg got caught between the wall and a metal pipe. He was stuck there for eight hours until a police emergency squad pried him loose.

Russia Warns Tito In Call for 'Revolt'

Anti-Tito Move

Reds Vanish In Southeast Europe Purge

By Edward Korry

Belgrade, Yugoslavia, Aug. 20 (U.P.).—The Communist parties of Hungary, Bulgaria and Albania are being purged of possible Titoist and western influences that could threaten Russia's hold on southeastern Europe, diplomatic reports indicated today.

Many important Communist officials—most of them unknown to the west—have disappeared in the past few weeks and queries as to their whereabouts either are discouraged or evaded. Some of these men include Communists this correspondent met on visits earlier this year to Hungary and Bulgaria.

One is George Andrejchin, who lived in the United States before World War I and who was councilor to the aged Bulgarian Premier Vassil Kolarov.

Another is Anton Rizov, who once lectured at the University of California.

A third is the Communist director of Hungaria, the well established Budapest publishing house.

Hundreds have been arrested in the ruthless campaign against "deviationists," according to reliable reports from both diplomatic and private sources.

Tito to Reply in Kind To Toughest-Ever Note

By the United Press

Government quarters predicted last night that Marshal Tito will reply in kind to Russia's "toughest-ever" note and probably will gain strength because of the Soviet threat.

American officials were confident Tito could put down any disturbances that might result from the Soviet call for a revolution.

The Russian note, it was believed here, will be resented in Yugoslavia as outside interference and will rally the highly nationalistic Yugoslavs to support their leader.

The Stalin-Communists in Yugoslavia were believed to be far too few to threaten the Tito regime.

of food to an extremely ill state, endangering their lives," the note said.

"Instead of replying to these accusations . . . the Yugoslav government seeks to substitute for this question another one—namely the question of the motives for the unlawful arrests of Soviet citizens—seeking in this way to justify the brutal treatment and other crimes of Yugoslav organs against Soviet citizens," Moscow charged.

The note accused Yugoslavia again of persecuting Soviet citizens because they support friendly relations between the two countries and "do not approve of the present day hostile policy of the Yugoslav government toward the Soviet Union."

"The real reason for the persecution of Soviet citizens," it said, "lies in the fact that they, alongside all patriots of Yugoslavia, do not approve of the well known and impermissible behavior of the Yugoslav government, which deserted the camp of democracy and socialism for the camp of international capitalism and is striving to do as much harm as possible to the Soviet Union in order to curry favor with the representatives of international capital and to build a career for itself on this."

Identified as White Russians

The note identified "persecuted" citizens as 12,000 White Russians who fled their homeland after the Bollshevik revolution but who had "atoned for their sins with pro-Soviet deeds."

The note compared Tito's government with those of Greece and Spain. It said that Spain, Yugoslavia and Greece were the only countries in the world where distribution of the Cominform resolution attacking Tito is a criminal offense.

The note said the Tito government's assertions to the effect that Socialist construction is progressing in Yugoslavia were similar to statements by Hitler and Mussolini in their day.

Union Liable For Back Pay

under an illegal union shop contract. The teamsters' local failed to obtain Labor Board approval to demand a union shop. The board threw out Newman's defense that he was forced by the union to lay off Fritz.

"It is well established," the board said, "that it is the duty of an employer to resist domination of his right and power to employ whether manifested by or toward a union. An employer is not relieved of responsibility for his discrimination because of economic necessity or the exigencies of the moment make expedient a violation of the act."

The board said the Taft-Hartley law gave the same remedy against a union as against an employer in discrimination cases.

Both May Be Liable

"Where the board finds that an employer and a labor organization are both responsible for the discrimination against an employe, the board's back pay order may be directed against both," it said. "As we have found both the employer and the union were responsible for the discrimination suffered by Fritz, we shall order them jointly and severally to make him whole for any loss of pay which he suffered by reason of the discrimination against him."

The board found that the union had coerced Fritz in his right to refrain from union activities. It said this occurred when Peter Calabrese, union business agent, told Fritz he could not work until he paid his dues and added:

"You know the union is stronger than you. You cannot fight a union and win."

In addition to ordering the back pay, the board ordered Newman and the union to cease and desist their illegal activities.

Crib Gnawing Called Rare in Satisfied Child; Habit Seldom Cause for Alarm, Parents Told

By N. S. Haseltine
Post Reporter

A baby's habit of gnawing his toys or edge of his crib is seldom cause for alarm, Washington parents were advised yesterday.

The habit is well known to child specialists. But unfortunately, said one authority the specialists are called in only in those rare instances when it has reached abnormal proportions and after physical harm has been done.

"Treatment," the specialist said, "must begin with the realization that indulgence is rarely encountered in infants whose nutritional and emotional needs are adequately satisfied."

Renewed interest in the habit came last week in news accounts of the lead poisoning death of a 4-year-old Hyattsville, Md., girl, who died after more than a year of gnawing on painted furniture in her home.

Lead poisoning illness of the victim's younger sister, however, was blamed by the specialists on "an even more normal" childhood trait—imitativeness.

The child, Elizabeth Carver, 3, of 4503 Decatur st., now a patient at Children's Hospital, is "more probably" the victim of following her sister's example than a victim of pica (abnormal appetite), they said.

The sick girl was reported "under close observation, but not acutely ill" by hospital physicians last night. She was taken there last Thursday after an autopsy on her sister, Claudette, confirmed that death was due to lead poisoning from gnawing on painted furniture.

The children's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Claude G. Carver, told investigators their youngsters gnawed off the paint and chewed it like gum despite every efforts to stop them. Two other children, Esther, 8, and John, 19 months, did not indulge, they said

Lead poisoning, the specialists pointed out, was a far greater hazard to "gnawing age" children some 20 years ago. Then, with evidence piling up that youngsters were sickening or dying from ingestion of lead from paints, furniture manufacturers switched to harmless vegetable paints for cribs and toys.

The danger still exists, but in lesser degree, the specialists said. Parents repaint cribs with lead-based paints, or pen toddlers in on porches where they are free to mouth the leaded paints of porch rails and furniture.

Dr. Leo Kanner, psychiatrist-pediatrician and director of the Children's Psychiatry Service at Johns Hopkins Hospital, Baltimore, outlined the problems in a chapter on eating behavior of his textbook, "Child Psychiatry."

The peculiarly infantile habit of eating things of no nutritional value is referred to as pica, from the Latin name of the omnivorous bird, the magpie.

Such perverted appetite, Dr. Kanner wrote, is mostly encountered in malnourished, poorly supervised and otherwise neglected infants, and is the commonest cause of lead poisoning in the first three years of life.

The child psychiatrist pointed out that any normal infant between four and nine months of age has a tendency to put his hands to his mouth. The behavior loses in frequency and intensity at the end of the first year, but may last longer in "developmentally retarted children," he wrote.

"If the object is too heavy or cannot be grasped with the hand, the Mohammed-mountain principle is applied; the infant brings his mouth close to the object and licks, sucks or gnaws at it," Dr. Kanner wrote.

Of 30 consecutive cases of children admitted to the Hopkins Hospital with pica, Dr. Kanner wrote, one in every five showed some degree of lead poisoning.

DEADLY FORCE—These pictures—released yesterday for the first time by the Atomic Energy Commission—show explosions of the atomic bomb tests on Eniwetok Atoll in the Pacific during the spring of 1948. It was at that time that the AEC reported to President Truman the results, "successful in all respects," of three atomic weapons, "each of improved design." The photos are in a booklet, made up by the Task Force 7 photographic unit, which will be distributed Monday by the Infantry Journal on a subscription basis to personnel of the task force is checked. It also knows that the present crisis is the most dangerous and delicate to confront the west since 1945.

Perhaps Secretary Snyder also appreciates the magnitude of the impending disaster. But his appointment was interpreted as an indication that the Administration meant to treat the crisis merely as an economic problem. Another surprise was the Administration's expressed hope that the conference would last only a week, so the officials could attend the annual meeting of the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development and the International Monetary Fund in Washington the following week.

On the American side there seemed to be little hope or expectation of major achievement. There was general conviction that the only real solution was for Britain to accept devaluation of the pound—to improve her foreign trade—and increased austerity for her people.

U. of Virginia Closes Some Fraternities

Charlottesville, Va., Aug. 20 (AP).—George B. Zehmer, University of Virginia summer school head, has announced two or three fraternities at the school have been closed for violation of Board of Visitors regulations.

In most instances, said Zehmer, the violations had to do with extending parties past deadline hours. He did not give the names of the fraternities.

He said that all would be reopened when fall term begins.

At the same time he announced the fraternities had been closed during the summer session, Zehmer commended the general conduct of summer school students.

He also noted that during the summer session much of the regular personnel of the fraternity houses had not been living in them. "A good part of the trouble cannot be blamed on the fraternities," says Zehmer.

British Express Displeasure Over Americans' Criticism played out is sheer nonsense," he continued, adding that it was time "due recognition was given to the part played by this country in world affairs."

"Now, when we have almost exhausted ourselves in six years of war and find ourselves in a grave economic position, our magnificant efforts in the past are overlooked," he complained.

From the British point of view the citicism from abroad couldn't come at a worse time. American, British and Canadian officials will go into a huddle in Washington September 6 to see whether they can find a lasting cure for Britain's dollar shortage. The British have been hoping for decisions reached in an atmosphere of sympathetic understanding. The sharp criticism makes them wince.

The Sunday Pictorial printed a cartoon in which a Bowery bum of a John Bull stands in front of a bar labeled "Socialist saloon" holding out a tin cup to Uncle Sam.

"This insulting cartoon—typical of hundreds of others on the same theme—has just appeared in the American press," said the Pictorial's caption.

In an article the tabloid commented that "it is fair to say that the British are riled. In fact, we're damned annoyed.

"During the past few weeks it has been impossible to pick up a newspaper without reading onslaughts against this country, its political leaders, and its people. Our traducers have not stopped short of downright lies.

"Britain is accustomed to a generous dose of abuse from the Continent. Now, it seems, we must be kicked downstairs by the Yanks."

On Borrowed Time

The Pictorial said some Americans seem to think Britain is "living on borrowed time and American money," and demanded to know:

"Well—is it also conceded that twice in this century the Americans have lived on borrowed time and British lives? And do you realize that one day you may need to do so again?"

'Let's get this clear—we're going to run our own country in our own British way," declared the Pictorial.

The Conservative Daily Telegraph protested that American critics oversimplify things. It is "too easy to say that the only method of closing a dollar deficit is to earn a dollar income," said the Telegraph. "What about the United States tariffs which help keep out British dollar exports?"

The Economist, an influential antilabor journal, denied that Britain's troubles are "due to anything that can properly be called socialism."

The independent Observer complained of "loud, emotional faultfinding" from overseas.

In general American criticism reproduced here has taken these main lines:

Here it is four years after the war and Britain still has its hand out for dollars. How much longer is this going on?

The British workman produces only half as much on the average as his counterpart in an American factory. He should work harder.

Britain cannot afford a five-day week at a time like this.

The Labor government is pampering the worker with welfare and health services which demand outrageously high taxes. Private enterprise is robbed of its incentive and does not risk capital for possible new profits.

Production Record Cited

To these criticisms, the Laborites reply:

British industry took a beating during the war, yet produced in the first quarter of this year at 131 per cent of the 1938 rate. This is a better showing than any other industrial nation of western Europe which took part in the war.

British exports are running 156 per cent of prewar. The trouble is in selling them to dollar areas. The recent falling off of American buying has hurt.

The British workman produces less than the American because he has fewer machines to help him. British industry is modernizing as fast as it can, especially in the branches that are now state owned.

The British workman produced only half as much as the American even before the war—when Britain had a Conservative government.

As for the five-day week, average hours worked in the United Kingdom, including overtime, are 46½ a week for men, compared with 47½ in 1938.

Spending for British welfare services is in pounds, not dollars. Sickness and death rates are the lowest ever. The new generation will be Britain's healthiest in history.

Taxes must stay high to curb inflation and thus give every Briton his fair share of national production and food.

A record one-fifth of the national income is now going into new capital investment. Company profits, even after taxation, are as high as ever.

The advance guard of British experts who will take part in the dollar talks left on the Queen Mary today. Leader of the delegation was Sir Henry Wilson Smith, Second Secretary to the British Treasury. With him were S. L. Holmes of the Board of Trade, R. L. Hall of the economic section of the cabinet office, and D. B. Pitbaldo, a treasury undersecretary. Sir Stafford and Foreign Secretary Ernest Bevin will sail next Saturday on the Queen Elizabeth.

'Engine' to Act Like Muscle

tracted in response to electrical stimuli furnished by basic acids or alkalis. Working with his brother, Dr. Ephraim Katchalski, a biochemist, he developed a plastic-like material from acrylic acid, which resembled plexiglas.

Operates Like Muscle

Dr. Aaron Katchalski found this material, when exposed to an acid such as hydrochloric, and an alkali such as soda lime, would expand and contract in the same fashion as a human muscle. He said the contractions and expansions proved to be in direct ratio to the stimuli.

This direct conversion of energy, the scientist pointed out, eliminates the intermediate process of the combustion engines. The fuel in an automobile, for example, is converted into heat energy, which in turn is converted into mechanical energy.

Direct conversion of chemical to mechanical energy, Dr. Katchalski believes, might increase energy utilization by 20 to 30 per cent.

Believed First System

"I believe it is the same process of energy transformation as in human muscle. I also believe it is the first synthetic contractile system ever developed," Dr. Katchalski said.

He explained that strips of the synthetic material will be placed in a container with water, and connected by a rod to a wheel. Two containers with alkali and acid will provide electric charges, which will keep the strips expanding and contracting in piston-like fashion. They, in turn, will motivate the rod, and keep the wheel spinning.

The new synthetic is called methyl-vinyl-acrylic rubber. The engine is expected to be in operation in three or four months.

Sparrows Point Strike To End on Monday

Baltimore, Aug. 20 (AP).—An unauthorized strike at the cold sheet mill of the Bethlehem Steel Co.'s Sparrows Point plant here will end Monday, a union spokesman said today.

The strike developed Friday morning when about 350 men showed up at the plant, but refused to go to work.

Albert Atallah, director of the union's District 8, said the walkout was "unauthorized and uncondoned by the union." He added that the apparent cause was a delay in reaching an agreement regarding an incentive bonus.

Rural Phone Service Asked by Farm Units

Blacksburg, Va., Aug. 20 (AP).—A group representing 46 Virginia farm organizations wants the scope of rural electric cooperatives widened to include telephone service where necessary.

The Virginia Agricultural Conference Board adopted a resolution here asking support of legislation to allow power cooperatives organized under the Rural Electrification Act to "provide telephone service in all rural areas which cannot otherwise obtain adequate and acceptable service."

Slum Clearance Streamlining Being Drafted

Col. Hayes Assigned To Map Program To Consolidate Condemnation

A consolidation of earlier proposals for a District housing code with a streamlining of slum condemnation procedures is being drafted by District officials for submission to Congress.

Lieut. Col. Thomas J. Hayes, assistant Engineer Commissioner, has been assigned to prepare such a program. It will combine proposals by the Washington Housing Association and the District Board of Trade for housing regulations with suggestions by city officials.

After a preliminary plan is developed, Hayes said, it will be submitted to interested groups such as the District Building Code Advisory Committee, the Board of Trade and the Housing Association for suggestion.

Later, the program will be placed before Commissioners and transmitted to Congress.

At present, the Board for Condemnation of Insanitary Buildings is limited to structures believed to harbor health menaces, while the Department of Inspections prosecutes on unsafe buildings.

Hayes said the program would attempt to develop a common agency which could attack slums from on both insanitary and unsafe grounds.

Realty Firms Fewer, And So Are Salesmen

The annual report of the Real Estate Commission yesterday disclosed that there are fewer firms and fewer salesmen in the real estate business.

During the fiscal year ending June 30, the Commission licensed 912 real estate firms, 24 less than the year before. A total of 1038 individuals were licensed to enter the real estate business, however, compared with 994 the year before. The number of licensed salesmen dropped from 1963 to 1929.

The number of complaints handled by the commission declined from 86 to 77 and resulted in suspension of one license and revocation of two others.

During the year, as a result of examinations, 165 real estate brokers were licensed, 486 real estate salesmen, 27 business chance brokers and 51 business chance salesmen.

Meter Man Wins $1352 For Idea at 25

A surprisingly simple idea for saving money on meter maintenance has won a $1352 bonus for William J. Doyle, 25-year-old serviceman with the Washington Gas Light Co.

Doyle

The bonus constituted 10 per cent of the more than $1000 a month the idea saved the company in one year.

Doyle's suggestion was this: Maintenance men make special trips to remove meters, test and overhaul them periodically. Why not get the servicemen who are performing some other type service on meters—such as turn gas on or off, etc.—to take to the shop whatever meters happen to be due for tests?

His idea was adopted, resulting in considerable saving of time and transportation of maintenance workers. He received a check recently from D. S. Bittinger, general superintendent.

Doyle has been with the company three years. He attended Roosevelt High School, served with the Army in China-Burma-India and European theaters and lives with his wife and 3-year-old daughter at 8416 Manchester rd., Silver Spring.

Jerry Klutz is on vacation. His column, The Federal Diary, will be resumed next Tuesday.

Polio Cases Here Reach Total of 34

The polio count in the District yesterday equaled that of one year ago.

With the report of an 8-year-old boy living in the 3100 block of Buena Vista Terrace se. diagnosed yesterday at Children's Hospital, the mark ties last year's August 20 at 34 cases.

Meanwhile, the District Health Department disclosed four new cases in Children's Hospital, two from Virginia and two from Maryland.

Diagnosed yesterday were polio cases of four boys: an 8-year-old from the 8300 block of Leona st., Forest Hill, Md.; a 3-year-old from Mitchellville, Md.; a 5-year-old from the 1100 block of Wilks st., Alexandria, Va., and a 4-year-old from Luray, Va.

34 Cases in D. C., 92 for Whole Area

Ninety-two cases of polio have been reported in the Washington metropolitan area by health officials so far this year. Six deaths have been reported from the disease in the same period.

The totals recorded by individual communities are:

District of Columbia—34.
Prince Georges County—26.
Montgomery County—14.
Arlington County—5.
Alexandria—5.
Fairfax County—5.

Silver Spring Postoffice Plans $50,000 Branch

The Silver Spring, Md., postoffice will double its facilities to serve 85,000 residents by constructing a new $50,000 branch at Newell rd. and Kenneth st., Postmaster William E. Bowman has announced.

Contract for construction of the new building has been awarded to the Silver Spring Property Management, Inc., of which John B. Sterling is president. The building will be leased to the Postoffice Department by the firm. Owners of the property are Blair Lee, 3d, E. Brooke Lee, jr., and their sister, Mrs. David Scull.

The new building will face the "silver spring" for which the community was named. It is located on property once owned by Postmaster General Montgomery Blair, who served in President Lincoln's cabinet.

Stab Victim Dies; Wife, 28, Is Held

Wilbert Lee, 28, 1518 D st. se., died early yesterday at Gallinger Hospital of stab wounds in his left breast.

Police said the wounds were inflicted an hour earlier by his wife, Mabel Corrine Lee, also 28, in their apartment. She is held at the Women's Bureau. Police said an inquest will take place in the case, but the time for it has not yet been set.

Boy Killed Accidentally By New Gun

A 16-year-old boy, son of a Mount Rainier (Md.) woman, shot and killed himself accidentally Friday night with his new .30-caliber rifle at his home in Covington, Ky.

Carver

The boy Bobby Carver, lived at the home of his aunt and uncle, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Rinehart, jr., in Covington. His mother, who is remarried, lives at 3323 Bunker Hill rd., Mount Rainier.

According to Covington police, the boy loved to hunt deer but didn't have a rifle. This summer he had found himself a job and saved enough from his small earnings to buy a rifle. This week he got the weapon.

In his uncle's home he jokingly snapped the trigger. "Stop it. Don't be stupid," a relative urged.

The boy snapped the trigger again. This time the rifle discharged and the bullet struck the boy in the head, killing him instantly. According to his mother, the boy lived in Covington but visited her in Mount Rainier during the summer months.

Prisoner Found Bleeding in Cell At Police Station

Homicide Squad detectives and Capt. Basil McAllister of the Tenth Precinct yesterday were investigating the case of a prisoner found bleeding from the mouth at 8:30 a. m. in a precinct cell block.

He was identified as Thomas Richie, jr., 25, of 1103 Park rd. nw. Records showed he was arrested at 2:15 a. m. on drunk and disorderly conduct charges.

Captain McAllister said Richie created a disturbance in the cellblock through most of the night, but was asleep at 8 a. m. when checked. His bleeding was discovered at 8:30 a. m., when he was to be taken to court.

At Freedmen's Hospital, it was said he was in fair condition with "possible head injuries." Hospital authorities said there were no new wounds cuts or bruises on his head. X-ray studies have not yet been completed.

Captain McAllister said Richie and members of his family said the victim had been in a fight August 10 and suffered head injuries at that time.

Bartenders Juggle That Sales Tax Cent

Some Do It Before Your Eyes, But You Pay It in Any Case

The price of beer—by one means or another—has gone up at many taverns in the city as a result of the barmen's attempt to reimburse themselves for the city sales tax. They must pay tax on gross receipts, but may not collect on sales below 14 cents.

Philip A. Guarino, president of the Washington Restaurant Beverage Association, yesterday described several "dodges" reported to his group.

Some barmen are still collecting a dime for a glass of lager, but the size has been cut from 8 ounces to 7. Others have moved the price up to 11 cents for the regular glass.

Just to Give an Idea

A third method has been to collect 11 cents, placing a penny in a jar or container alongside the cash register "to give people the idea the price has not changed and the penny is going for tax," Guarino explained.

Another system, which keeps the price stable at the expense of the District government, is to collect a dime, then ring up only 9 cents on the register, thus building up a pile of extra pennies in the till to offset the tax on gross receipts.

Guarino's own policy at his establishment, Phil's Spaghetti House, 7307 Georgia ave. nw., is to keep the dime price on a regular glass. "It's just one of those things and we've got to take it in stride. We have a steady clientele, and they would be up in arms at any change."

Meanwhile, at the District Building, Sales Tax Administrator Allan F. Brooke reported 14,000 applications have been received and processed for certificates of registration. Henceforth, field men will be able to check on merchants who explain a lack of a certificate by the statement they have applied for one, but have not yet received it.

Form Developed

Sales tax workers have dedeveloped a form for filing sales and use tax returns. The form is the size of a check blank and contains six items to be filled in. First returns are due September 20.

Mailing of the forms will begin September 1 and an instruction sheet will accompany each form.

An indication of the returns that may be expected from cafeterias was given yesterday by Government Services, Inc., which reported collection of only $19.15 in taxes on sales of $293,731 worth of food during the first two weeks of the month.

R. R. Ayers, GSI general manager, pointed out the tax collection was low "because the great majority of the patrons spend less than 50 cents for the meals" while the tax is levied on those costing more than $1.25.

District Barbers' Certificates Drop By 50 in 1949

The District supply of hair trimmers and scalp massagers dropped by 50 during fiscal year 1949, the Board of Barber Examiners informed the Commissioners yesterday.

The number of shops listed by the board, however, was boosted from 520 to 533. A total of 1675 certificates for barbers and their apprentices was issued during the fiscal year, as compared with 1725 during the previous year.

Of this total, 1483 were barber certificate renewals, 59 were restorations, 26 resulted from four examinations held during the year and 107 were for apprentices.

D. C. Stumped by Missourian's Refusal to Buy Local Tags

By Seymour Fishbein
Post Reporter

The District seems to be temporarily stumped by a Missourian's outright refusal to buy local auto tags—but that's only part of a long story.

The Missouri man, Maurice W. Covert, who's been working here since 1945 and is now on the staff of Senator Pat McCarran's Judiciary Committee, may be quite within his rights in driving with Missouri tags.

Trouble is, there is no sure way of telling until Traffic Director George Keneipp can find out from the State of Missouri what it would do to a District citizen in comparable circumstances. And the State of Missouri apparently is slow, to say the least, about responding.

As for the official District policy toward drivers with "foreign" tags, according to the Traffic Act of 1925, the key word is "reciprocity."

Must Check Periodically

Under this rule, the District is ordered to check periodically with the States, United States Possessions and the Canadian Provinces to find out their rules and reciprocate in kind.

The Department of Vehicles and Traffic mails out a questionnaire each year to find out how other States would treat District drivers.

Missouri hasn't answered the last three requests for information. Neither has Illinois or Indiana. Among those States that have answered, many leave much to be desired, it seems.

Arizona, for instance wants you to get Arizona tags when you've registered to vote or when you've obtained an Arizona hunting or fishing license.

That makes Arizona-tagged cars practically immune to District tags. There is no voting here and not even the most enthusiastic Board of Trade brochure mentions hunting or fishing.

Reciprocity to What?

Herman S. Cole, the Department of Vehicles and Traffic administrative officer in charge of these cases, stares glumly when he reads such questionnaires as that from California. California says it grants reciprocity to out-of-State drivers.

"Reciprocity to what?" Cole asks. "We grant reciprocity and they grant reciprocity and what are you gonna do about it?"

For Cole, Florida is a breath of fresh air for the relative simplicity of its policy. Florida requires Florida residents to have Florida plates and Florida residents are persons gainfully employed there or who have children in the public schools.

But take Virginia: It allows a car with D. C. tags to operate in Arlington and Fairfax counties if the car is garaged in the District at least four nights each week. It would take a flock of sentries to reciprocate that one.

And in Pennsylvania you may keep your D. C. tags forever if you return to the District at least one day a month. An old pain in Cole's neck is a Pennsylvanian who's been living in the District for years.

Headache From New Jersey

Whenever he is ordered to get District tags, Cole says, he trots down to Cole's office and offers sworn testimony by his whole family that he visits Pennsylvania every month without fail.

Cole also gets a yearly visit from a Government employe from New Jersey, which requires New Jersey registration as soon as a person reveals an intention to become a Jersey resident. The Jersey man keeps telling Cole he has no intention of becoming a District resident. He's been living here seven years.

Recently the department has had to appeal to Illinois for a little help. The son of an Illinois Congressman wants to keep his Illinois plates while driving around the District.

The Illinois Congressman is also extremely anxious to keep the Illinois tags because: "People back home see those D. C. tags, they think my son's going high hat—Illinois tags aren't good enough for him, they'll say."

As for other motives—some State tags are cheaper, some cars wouldn't pass the stringent District inspection and some people feel cops are easier on "foreign" cars.

Housewife Raped in Car On D. C. Street

Woman Is Beaten, Robbed at 14th and Pennsylvania, S.E.

A 27-year-old Washington housewife was raped, robbed and severely beaten early yesterday as she drowsed in her car waiting to meet her Marine sergeant husband who was returning from Camp LeJeune, N. C.

The attack took place at 13th st. and Pennsylvania ave. se.

The attacker narrowly escaped in a chase by a motorist. A police dragnet through the area netted one suspect, but he was released when he could not be identified.

The victim was taken to Gallinger Hospital, where she was treated for shock and severe bruises.

She told police this story:

Her husband, unfamiliar with streets here, was riding to Washington from Camp Lejeune with a friend. She agreed to meet him at 13th and Pennsylvania. She parked, thought she had locked all the doors and windows, and finally dozed.

She was awakened by a man beating her on the head with what she thought was a blackjack. He forced a pillow over her face to prevent screaming, and attacked her. Then he beat her again on the arms. He left with $30 and her car keys from her pocketbook.

As he hurried from the auto, another car drove up with a man and woman who intended to mail a letter there. She screamed at them, and the driver pursued the attacker for a half-block through an alley. He was nearly close enough to grab the attacker, he said, when he was blinded by a truck's lights and lost him.

While she was being taken to Gallinger Hospital, the search was begun. The attacker was described as a light-skinned Negro 20 to 25 years old; 5 feet, 6 inches tall; wearing a tan sport shirt, brown trousers, no hat, and having a clean appearance.

An hour after the attack, the Marine husband arrived, and police accompanied him to the hospital.

PERRY DELLASTATIOUS
Dies of injuries

A McKinley High School football star died yesterday as a result of a fractured skull suffered earlier in the day when his jeep truck overturned after striking a tree.

Another former McKinley star, though thrown clear, suffered injuries, and a girl escaped injury. The mishap occurred at 2:30 a. m., in the 2300 block of Rhode Island ave. ne.

Brother of Coach

The victim was Perry Dellastatious, 18, of Edelblut dr., Burnt Mills Hills, Silver Spring, who died at Casualty Hospital at 1:40 p. m. He was a football star, played basketball and was on the track team. He was a younger brother of William Dellastatious, who starred at McKinley, received all-American mention at the University of Missouri, and is now backfield coach at the University of Florida.

The youth injured was James Robert Thompson, 19, of 1312 Randolph st. ne., now a star at Clemson University. He was rated all-city for his play at McKinley, particularly in the Post city championship game two years ago. He is known as "Bobby" and as "Bugs" Thompson.

Thompson

He was treated at Casualty Hospital for a cut on the lip and released, but later was treated by a private physician for a concussion. The third occupant of the car, thrown clear and uninjured, was Helen Hudgins, 18, of 3803 40th pl., Cottage City, Md.

Fell Asleep, Say Police

Police who investigated the case said that Dellastatious, the driver, apparently fell asleep at the wheel. In addition to his athletic activity at the school, he was vice president of the student governing body, and president of Circle T, a student athletic group. He was to have been graduated in the February class and intended to go to Missouri University to follow, if possible, in his brother's football footsteps.

Surviving are his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Andrew E. Dellastatious, sr.; five brothers, Andrew J., of Washington; William, of Gainesville, Fla.; Sinclair, Paul, and Jack, of the Silver Spring address; and a sister, Phyllis Dellastatious of the Silver Spring address.

Four Injured

Four persons were injured slightly when two autos collided yesterday at Blagden ave. and Matthewson dr. nw.

They were William J. Gassert, 28, 1614 Longfellow st. nw., driver of one car, and his wife, Catherine; Mrs. Ida Page, 26, 3616 Connecticut ave. nw., driver of the other car, and her son, Robert, 2. All were treated at Emergency Hospital for cuts and bruises, and released. The Gassert car turned over, and two ambulances were called to the scene.

The Woman Pays

Theft Repays Waitress for Her Kindness

A good deed brought misfortune early yesterday to Mrs. Sarah E. Whittaker, 23-year-old waitress.

About 2:45 a.m., a man entered Haje's Restaurant, 1406 14th st. nw. He gave Mrs. Whittaker a hard-luck story. He was broke. Hungry.

The waitress produced an order of fried chicken. She took $1.35 from her purse and put it on the counter with the check for the meal.

"You'll get paid back double," the man promised.

At 3:30 a.m., Mrs. Whittaker got off from work and walked to her home at 1417 Rhode Island ave. nw. She went in the bathroom and washed her hair.

When she came out of the bathroom, she found the apartment had been ransacked. A billfold containing $11 was missing and clothing and costume jewelry valued at $56 had also been taken.

Mrs. Whittaker returned to the restaurant and called police to report the burglary. She then got a man acquaintance to walk her home. As Mrs. Whittaker and her escort passed one corner they saw the man Mrs. Whittaker had fed. He was wearing a yellow sports shirt which belonged to Mrs. Whittaker's husband.

They chased him up an alley but he got away. Police arrived and surrounded the neighborhood. Finally, Pvt. John Gray of the Second Precinct turned up the suspect hiding behind a fence. The money and clothing were recovered.

Charged with housebreaking and grand larceny, the suspect was identified as Herbert L. Gibson, 28, no fixed address. He will be arraigned in Municipal Court Monday.

D. C. Ponders Illegal Porch Enclosures

Permits Waived During Wartime Housing Shortage

The District government is pondering what to do about several thousand homeowners who have erected enclosed porches illegally without permits.

Full-fledged enforcement would result in taking the residents to court where they face fines and court orders to remove the additions, Deputy Director of Inspections J. J. Ilgenfritz disclosed yesterday.

In addition, the District is aware that a properly constructed room of the same type, would cost the property owners from $1000 to $1500, Ilgenfritz said.

Arose During War

The problem arose during World War II when many residents, anxious to add space to their homes during the housing shortage, enclosed existing back porches, thus adding a room.

Usually this was done on brick row houses in B. C and D zoned areas. In such sections, a frame addition may not be put on a house and inside rooms must have direct access to light and ventilation. The enclosing of a porch frequently resulted in cutting off a kitchen, dining room or bathroom from the outside.

For this reason, Ilgenfritz explained, many residents went ahead on their own—without the permit—and enclosed their porches. The inspection staff was shorthanded during the war and prosecution was waived, he added.

Forced to Face Problem

Recently, however, several residents have asked why they may not enclose their porches since their neighbors did so during the war. These inequities have forced the District government to face the problem of the delayed enforcement.

Several months ago, orders were issued 25 homeowners on Girard st. ne. near Michigan ave. to tear down the illegally enclosed porches. Irate homeowners belabored the Inspection Department and the Engineer's Department complaining that this was unfair.

The prosecution was suspended and the Commissioners went into a huddle, deciding to issue clarifying regulations on how a back porch may be built and enclosed to comply with the rules. The matter of prosecution on existing structures is still up in the air

Virginia DeMolay Association Elects Officers

John M. Taylor, jr., 20, of Portsmouth, Va., was elected master councillor of the Virginia Association of DeMolay at the group's third annual convention in Alexandria yesterday.

Taylor, who holds the DeMolay's Degree of Chevalier, succeeds Charles W. Howard of Richmond. Howard presided through closing sessions of the Alexandria convention.

Other officers elected yesterday were: Forrest D. Tignor of Richmond, senior councillor, and Fred O. Johnson of Alexandria, junior councillor.

More than 200 boys, ranging from 14 to 21 years of age, attended the two-day convention of the order which is sponsored by Masons throughout Virginia.

The conclave formally closed with a dance last night, but will be followed by a convention church service at St. Paul's Episcopal Church at 11 a. m. today.

Man, 65, Falls Dead At Union Station

A 65-year-old man identified by police as Clarence W. Riffer, of San Francisco, Calif., fell dead in Union Station last night.

He became ill in the concourse of the station, later becoming unconscious, apparently suffering a heart attack. He was rushed to Emergency Hospital, where he was pronounced dead at 7:15 p. m.

Adventist Scores New Calendar Plan

Advocates of a proposed new calendar were scored as "anti-Catholic, anti-Protestant and anti-Jewish" last night by Carlyle B. Haynes, Seventh Day Adventist leader, and a member of the Religious Liberty Association.

"The effect on religion and on its solemn days because of the proposed new world calendar now before the American Congress of the United Nations would be positively devastating," he disclosed.

"It is bound to inflict grave economic disabilities and loss to those who stanchly continue to observe the day that is sacred to them," Haynes said. Stating that the destruction of the existing and immemorial periodicity of a rest day will secularize what God made holy, he said "it is bound to have demoralizing influence."

Haynes, chairman of the industrial and labor relations bureau of the General Conference, Seventh-Day Adventists, spoke on the "Saturday Night Camp Meeting" radio broadcast over station WOL from the Capital Memorial Church, 5th and F sts. nw.

Haynes, who lives at 6902 Sycamore ave., Takoma Park, Md., is the author of a book, "World Calendar Versus World Religion." He was the main speaker on a panel discussion of the calendar question on the broadcast sponsored by the SDA youth of the Washington area.

Falls Church Ends 3-Day Fete Today

The three-day festival commemorating the first anniversary of Falls Church as a city will conclude today at the festival grounds opposite the Falls Church High School on Hillwood ave.

Hours for the celebration are from 3 to 11 p. m., during which carnival-type attractions will be open to the public. Highlight of the day's program will be the selection of a "red-haired queen" at 8 p. m.

The field of redheads was narrowed to six yesterday in the second of two eliminations. Originally about 40 aspirants ranging in age from 2 to 40 were in the contest.

The winner will be selected tonight from these finalists: Gwen Monger, 28, 2318 13th place se.; Lillian K. Cockerille, 4, of Fairfax; Rose Keyn, 23, 1600 N. 16th st., Arlington; Ann C. Thompson, 6, 506 Madison st., Falls Church; Sharon Lee Earman, 2, 800 Grove st., Falls Church, and Norma Lee, 4, 4824 S. 9th st., Arlington.

Yesterday several thousand persons visited the festival grounds and participated in a wide variety of entertainment features. The show is stressing children's attractions as well as those for the adults.

A pet show yesterday resulted in presentation of the top prize to Margaret Trout, 14, of Vienna, whose baby skunk was judged the most unusual exhibit.

Tenacious Policeman To Keep Job

The case of the Washington police private who could not be fired or retired ended yesterday with a decision to let him stay on the job.

Highsmith

Pvt. Alton L. Highsmith, who has had the departmental brass nonplussed for a year, will remain on a light duty assignment at the Communications and Records Division or be assigned to similar clerical duty, the District Commissioners have decided.

The Highsmith problem began on August 21, 1948, when he had a fainting spell while on scout car duty in the Fourteenth Precinct. As a result, on January 14, he was tried by a Police Trail Board on a charge of "unsatisfactory physical condition." He was found not guilty.

The police report submitted at the hearing said that Highsmith was seized with a spell during which "he states he experienced flashes of light and then blackness, and it was determined that he ultimately became unconscious." No further diagnosis appears in the record.

The following month Highsmith was sent before the Board of Police and Fire Surgeons. This board recommended he be retired without compensation because his physical condition was not the result of police duty.

After a hearing in March, the Retiring and Relief Board decided that although Highsmith had served in the department 19 months, "he is physically incapacitated for duty by reason of disability not incurred in the line of duty as a policeman," and therefore was not eligible for retirement.

When this report was submitted to the Commissioners, they turned the problem over to Corporation Counsel Vernon E. West for advice. He agreed with the findings of all boards concerned and recommended keeping Highsmith on clerical duty.

He pointed out Highsmith "has served with a high degree of efficiency" in the C. & R. Division and that is improbable such assignment would harm his coworkers or the public.

The Commissioners thereupon approved the recommendation.

Clan Campbell Chief Dies In Scotland

Inveraray, Scotland, Aug. 20 (AP). Niall Diarmid Campbell, Duke of Argyll and hereditary chief of the Clan Campbell, died at his 200-year-old castle here today. He was 77 years old. He never married. His cousin, Capt. Ian Douglas Campbell, succeeds to the title.

The duke hated modern things. He refused to have anything to do with the telephone. He declined to get in an automobile if he could travel by bicycle.

He held that his power over his lands was above modern laws.

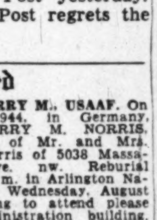
Although he used the title of duke—the dukedom goes back to 1701—Campbell had older titles among his string of 15. That of Baron Campbell, for instance, was created in 1445.

The chieftainship of Clan Campbell goes back in direct line to 1286, when the duke's ancestor, Sir Colin Campbell, was created a knight. The title, in Gaelic, is Mac Cailean Mhor.

As a duke he was one of the 26 premier peers of the nearly 900 members of the House of Lords, outranked only by members of the royal family. He was hereditary keeper of the Great Seal of Scotland, heritable master of His Majesty's Household in Scotland and held the ancient, now honorary naval title of Admiral of the Western Isles. He was honorary colonel of the Fifteenth (Canadian) Argyll light infantry.

Correction

James E. Patton, 36, a painter, of 3620 Jenifer st. nw., was held in $1000 bond yesterday when arraigned in Municipal Court on a bad check charge. His case was continued until August 31.



Robey

Patton was arrested Friday after he fled from Goldenberg's Department Store, where he had attempted to cash a check. He was arrested after an auto chase through downtown streets by Hugh Robey, retired detective sergeant of the Metropolitan police who is now a store detective at Goldenberg's.

By mistake, a photograph of Robey was identified as Patton in The Washington Post yesterday. The Washington Post regrets the error.

Rear Admiral Halstead, 88, To Be Buried in Arlington

Rear Admiral Alexander S. Halstead, 88, who as commander of United States Naval Forces in France in 1919 supervised transportation home for the American Expeditionary Force, will be buried Wednesday in Arlington Cemetery.

The admiral died Friday in the Naval Hospital at Oakland, Calif.

Born in Philadelphia on December 17, 1861, he was graduated from the Naval Academy in 1883.

During the Spanish-American War, he served aboard the cruiser Raleigh, participating in the Battle of Manila Bay, the capture of Corregidor and Grand Islands and the assault on Manila.

From 1906 to 1909, he was inspector of Naval ordnance at San Francisco and from 1912 to 1913, commander of the battleship California, flagship of the Pacific Fleet. For a period in 1915, he was supervisor of New York Harbor.

During the early part of World War I, he served as the senior member of the board of appraisals for merchant and private vessels and then, in October, 1918, was made commander of the Navy's Brest (France) district.

He served as commander of U. S. Naval Forces in France from January to October, 1919, when 2 million American soldiers were transported home.

After the war, he commanded the Portsmouth (N. H.) Navy Yard and the 12th Naval District at San Francisco, retiring in 1923.

He held the Distinguished Service Medal and the Navy Cross—both awarded for outstanding service in returning home the AEF—the French Legion of Honor, the Dewey Medal and the Spanish-American War and Nicaraguan Badges.

Surviving are a niece, Miss Anne Squire of 1215 19th st. nw., and a brother-in-law, Herbert Simmons of Ocala, Fla. Time for the services at Arlington had not been set last night.

Mrs. Thuee Dies; Active In Charities

Mrs. Frances Helena Thuee, 80, died yesterday in Providence Hospital from the effects of a circulatory ailment.

Mrs. Thuee, who made her home with her son, Frederick A. Thuee, Washington attorney of 4550 Connecticut ave. nw., had been active for many years as a volunteer worker in Catholic charities.

She was one of the original members of the Ladies of Charity in the District and also was active in the Sodality Union. For 25 years she acted as a chaperon at Trinity College and was a member of St. Patrick's Church for more than 50 years.

Born in Harpers Ferry, W. Va., Mrs. Thuee came to Washington as a young girl.

The Rt. Rev. Msgr. John J. Russell, director of Catholic Charities for the District, will conduct funeral services in St. Patrick's Church, 10th and G sts. nw., Tuesday at 9 a. m. Burial will be in Mount Olivet Cemetery.

A widow, Mrs. Thuee leaves, besides her son, two brothers, Bernard J. Miles of Trenton, N. J., and Joseph S. Miles of Underwood, Fla., and a sister, Mrs. Elizabeth V. Galvin of Washington.

Harry E. Tipper

Chicago, Aug. 20 (AP).—Harry E. Tipper, 42, Negro publisher of the Chicago World, a weekly newspaper, died today.

The paper was founded 31 years ago by Tipper's father.

Tipper's death resulted from injuries he received in a fall Thursday night.

Griffith Named Defense Chairman For Chest Drive

Appointment of Paul H. Griffith as Department of Defense chairman for the 1950 Community Chest campaign was announced yesterday by Secretary of Labor Maurice J. Tobin chairman of the Federal Government unit.

Griffith

Now personal assistant to Secretary of Defense Johnson, Griffith is a veteran of both World Wars. He also has been national commander of the American Legion.

Griffith was commissioned a major in 1940 and served for a time as assistant executive in the office of the Undersecretary of War. Later, he was adviser and military aide to Johnson who was then personal representative of the President in the Middle and Near East.

Reinterment Set Today for Two Brothers

Reburial services for two brothers, Lieut. William J. Kehoe and 2nd Lieut. John C. Kehoe, Army Air forces officers, will be held at Aquia Episcopal Church, Stafford County, Va., today at 2 p. m. Burial will be in the church cemetery with military honors.

Lieut. William Kehoe, the oldest son in the family, was born March 7, 1916, in Washington, D. C. He was reported missing in action as a B-26 pilot with the Ninth Army Air Force in April, 1944. In 1946 his remains were identified and buried in an American graveyard in France.

Lieut. John Conway Kehoe, born Jan. 24, 1922, at Bealeton, Va., went into action as a B-24 pilot with the Eighth Air Force a few days after his brother was reported missing. His plane was demolished by flak in France, August, 1944, and his body was buried at night by members of the underground in France, as the territory was then in German hands.

Lieut. W. J. Kehoe is survived by his 7-year-old son, William J. 3d, of Greenville, S. C., and his widow, the former Jane Martin of Elberton, Ga., now Mrs. William Arnold of Greenville.

Lieut. John Conway Kehoe is survived by his wife, the former Ruth Wallace of Warrentown, Va., and their 5-year-old son, John Conway Kehoe, jr.

Other survivors include the parents, Mr. and Mrs. John Carlisle Kehoe of Bealeton, and four sisters and two brothers.

Mrs. Charlotte E. Davis

Funeral services for Mrs. Charlotte E. Davis, 76, District resident for the past 46 years, who died Friday at Doctors Hospital, will be held at 3 p. m. Monday at the S. H. Hines Funeral Home, 2901 14th st. nw. Burial will be in Glenwood Cemetery.

Mrs. Davis suffered a stroke at her home at 3117 South Dakota ave. ne. at noon Friday. She died that evening.

A native of Ebensburg, Pa., Mrs. Davis came here to make her home 46 years ago. Her husband, Howard W. Davis, died in 1926. He was a machinist and electrician.

Mrs. Davis was a Gold Star Mother and a member of the George E. Killeen Unit No. 25 of the American Legion Auxiliary. Her son, Alvin Davis, was killed in World War I.

She leaves her daughter, Laverna M. Davis, of the home address; two sisters, Martha Davis, Johnstown, Pa., and Laverna McDonald, Barnesboro, Pa., and two brothers, William Elliott, Ebensburg, and George Elliott, Johnstown.

Rev. Rankin Of Georgetown Dead at 68

The Rev. R. Rush Rankin, S.J., 68, former dean of the Georgetown University College of Arts and Sciences, who received three decorations for gallantry as a chaplain in the First World War, died Friday at Georgetown University Hospital.

Fr. Rankin

Father Rankin, who marked his golden jubilee in the Society of Jesus on August 14, had been ill two years following a heart attack and complications which forced his retirement from teaching. His field was social science.

He had returned to Georgetown last year from his teaching post at St. Peter's College, Jersey City, N. J., in the hope of regaining his health.

Overseas Two Years

Volunteering for duty in 1917, Father Rankin was overseas almost two years with the Forty-fifth Infantry Regiment, which became part of the Fourth Division. During that time he served as chief of chaplains in his area.

He received the Croix de Guerre and the Silver Star, with oak leaf cluster representing a second award, for gallantry under fire during the Argonne offensive.

He also received a personal citation from Gen. John J. Pershing, commander in chief of American forces in Europe. He was discharged in 1919 as a captain.

Father Rankin first came here in 1907, when he taught at Georgetown Preparatory School while training for the priesthood. He returned in 1926 as head of the sociology department of Georgetown, and two years later became dean of the College of Arts and Sciences and also director of the Graduate School. He served as dean for three years until he became ill.

A native of Jersey City, Father Rankin received his AB degree at the age of 18 from St. Peter's College. He entered the Jesuit Novitiate at Frederick, Md., the same year and in 1901 became a member of the Society of Jesus.

Ordained in 1915

He began his theological studies in 1912 at Woodstock College, Woodstock, Md., and was ordained by the late James Cardinal Gibbons in 1915.

He was teaching at Fordham University when the First World War broke out and returned there in 1919, serving as regent of the Graduate School. He later was made director of the Fordham School for Social Service, until he was transferred to Georgetown.

Regaining his health after leaving here in 1932, he returned to teaching the following year at St. Peter's College, where he remained for 15 years.

Arrangements are being made at Georgetown for a funeral mass which will be offered on Monday at Dahlgren Chapel. Burial will be in the Jesuit Cemetery at Georgetown.

He is survvied by a sister, Miss Mary Rankin of Jersey City.

Music Festival Set at Stadium

A music festival will be presented by the National Negro Opera Company at Griffith Stadium Friday evening. Napoleon Reed, Robert McFerrin, Noble Sissle and other noted singers and musicians will be featured.

Proceeds will be used for future operatic productions and for an auditorium building fund, company spokesman announced.

H. W. Wells Funeral Set For Monday

Funeral services for Hubert Wetmore Wells, 82, scholar, social worker and former Episcopal minister, will be held at 3 p. m. Monday at All Souls' Memorial Church, Cathedral ave. and Woodley pl. nw. Burial will be in Rock Creek Cemetery.

Mr. Wells

Mr. Wells died Friday at the home of his daughter, Mrs. C. Colden Miller, 208 Raymond st., Chevy Chase, Md., after an illness of several months. He had moved here only recently from his estate, Greenlea, near Delaware City, Del.

Graduated From Yale

He was born in Madison, Wis., but grew up in Middletown, Conn. After attending a private school he went to Yale, and was graduated in 1889. Ordained in the Church of the Incarnation in New York, he began his ministry as assistant rector in Grace Church there. Later he served as rector of St. Andrew's Church in Wilmington, Del.

In 1913, he was appointed a canon of the Cathedral of St. Peter and St. Paul in Detroit where his duty consisted largely of social service. In 1916, he resigned from the ministry to enter Red Cross work. During World War I, he was a Red Cross worker overseas.

Translated Horace

After the war, he devoted much of his time to study and writing. Among his works is a translation of the Satire of Horace.

In social service, at one time he worked with Jane Addams' Hull House in Chicago, and he was one of the early advocates of a child labor law.

Besides Mrs. Miller, survivors include his wife, Mrs. Rose Standish Wells; two other daughters, Mrs. James M. Winfield of Wilmington, Del., and Mrs. Francis Compton of Darien, Conn.; and eight grandchildren.

Dr. Samuel Green

Atlanta, Aug. 20 (U.P.)—Dr. Samuel Green who lived an often tempestuous life as Imperial Wizard of the Ku Klux Klan, was buried today after simple funeral services.

There was no visible sign that the recognized leader of the modern invisible empire was being mourned by his followers.

Undoubtedly, numerous Klansmen were among the 600 persons attending the rites, but no insigna of the order was evident. The crowd was a mixture of men in tattered shirts, and well-dressed members of the medical profession.

Green was an obstetrician. He died Thursday night.

Dr. Arthur Vann Gibson officiated at Presbyterian funeral services.

James Parsons Dies Here; D.C. Contractor

James L. Parson, jr., 69, building contractor, died Friday night in Doctors Hospital after an illness of about a month.

Mr. Parsons had been active in Washington building circles since 1905. The offices of the James L. Parsons, Jr., Co. were located in the Homer Building.

A native of Washington, he was the son of the late James L. Parsons and Wilhelmina Ryals Parsons. His home was at 2 Laird lane, Chevy Chase, Md.

Among the buildings constructed by Mr. Parsons' firm are Kann's and Lansburgh's department stores, all buildings of the Hecht Co., the Episcopal Home for Children and the Maurice Electric Co. building.

He was a member of the Master Builders' Association, Associated General Contractors of America, Washington Board of Trade, and was a thirty-second degree Mason.

He is survived by his wife, Mrs. Edith Allen Parsons; two brothers, Charles W. Parsons and David A. Parsons, and a sister, Mrs. F. Larmour Oyster, all of Washington.

Funeral services will be held Tuesday at 11 a. m. at the S. H. Hines Funeral Home, 2901 14th st. nw. Interment wil be in Fort Lincoln Cemetery.

James Kearse Hall

Funeral services for James Kearse Hall, 32, an accountant with the Civil Aeronautics Authority, will take place at 9 a. m., Tuesday, with a mass at the Fort Myer Chapel, and burial at Arlington Cemetery.

He died Friday at the Naval Hospital at Bethesda, after an illness of a year.

Born at Petersburg, Va., he was a graduate of The Citadel. He served as a captain in the Engineer Corps in the last war, being attached to the District Engineer's office at Baltimore. On discharge, he joined the CAA.

Surviving him are his wife, Mrs. Joan Hall; a son and daughter, James K., jr., and Joan Hall; his mother, Mrs. Frank Jericoe; a sister, Mrs. John J. Reichardt; and and a brother, Frank R. Hall, all of the Washington area. He lived at 2721 S. Buchanan st., Arlington.

Car Wash, Key And Card Put Hacker in Jail

A hacker's identification card, an ignition key and a car wash combined yesterday to send Rudolph Dupree, 25, to jail for 30 days with more court action to come.

The identification card—somebody else's—caused Dupree, who resides at 1411 Orren st. ne., to get the jail sentence from Judge Milton S. Kronheim, jr., of Municipal Court. Dupree was found guilty of being an unlicensed hacker and driving a taxi after revocation of his own hacker's card.

The ignition key, stolen, according to police, caused him to be held for grand jury action with bond set at $1000 on a housebreaking and larceny charge.

The car wash caused him to be caught, according to police.

Det. Sergt. John G. Williams said police were called to investigate the burglary of the filling station at 840 Bladensburg rd. ne., August 2. Taken were some cash and the key to a 1949 Oldsmobile belonging to one of the station operators, William E. Havener.

Williams said a used-car dealer later called to say that a cab driver—and he gave the identity of the cab—wanted to sell an Oldsmobile for $1000, offering to turn over its key. Williams reported this to Havener, who said that he often serviced the cab.

On Friday, Dupree went around to the station for the periodic wash of his cab and police soon arrived to arrest him. They say they found the ignition key in his rooms.

Conductor's Arias Thrill Trolley Riders

The Washington Post
MARIO BELLINY
"Do-re-mi-fa-sol-la-te-do"

Trilling on a trolley is routine for conductor Mario Belliny, whose melodies transcend the discord over whether bus and streetcar passengers shall have music.

Mario is not an orchestra conductor. He's an opera-singing streetcar conductor. He's the "opera-tor" of a Friendship Heights car, and his baritone voice has carried him to new heights of friendship among many of his regular passengers.

What's all the fuss about, anyhow? Isn't there already music in the hum of steel wheels as they go rolling along, singing a song? Doesn't the sharp ring of a trolley bell strike a musical note?

"I just can't help it," says Belliny, who finds himself whistling, humming or even bursting into an aria from "Rigoletto"—provided there aren't too many passengers aboard.

It's unconscious with him. In fact, his shyness is noteworthy if he thinks anybody's listening.

His father had a "truly beautiful voice," Belliny says of his early life in Allentown, Pa., and Providence, R. I. He enjoyed his dad's singing so much that he studied voice himself for 11 years, beginning when he was 18.

He toured with the St. Cecile Opera Company of Providence, but discovered "it's so much fun to sing that I just can't accept money for it." So he came to Washington, where he has worked for 15 years with Capital Transit.

At 45, Belliny keeps his repertoire of classical and popular songs in good tune by workouts in the shower, while he shaves, or on outings with his wife and 14-year-old son, David, in the country. They live at 4840 Crescent st. nw.

He reckons the Italian operas are his favorites, because that was the language and music he first knew. But French, German and English works aren't overlooked, and he like such Latin compositions as "Ave Maria" and "Panis Angelicus."

"Among popular music, something like 'Cruising Down the River' is fine," he said, interrupting a warble at the corner of Wisconsin and Mass.

"But this new jazz stuff—that's not for me."

Even before they installed "canned" music on his trolley, some of Mario's passengers used to ask if he had a radio. They didn't notice the tremor of his vocal chords.

"I would offer to turn it off, and then they would catch on," he said.

Cubans Praise Junior Police

Washington's Junior Police and Citizens Corps program yesterday left a "highly favorable" impression on a group of 21 visiting Cubans.

The group of sociologists, doctors, judges and other professional persons were here on a month-long tour of the United States.

After seeing the Junior Police Corps in action and hearing it explained by Police Pvt. Oliver J. Cowan, Judge Alferio F. Noreiga of the Santa Clara (Cuba) Municipal Court, spokesman for the group, told reporters:

"If the entire world were doing as Washington is with juvenile delinquency, it would be a better place for all coming generations to live in. We are highly favorably impressed."

At the Junior Police Corps headquarters at 720 Barry pl. nw., the visitors saw members play football and heard the Junior Police Choir sing and corps leaders explain the program.

71-Year-Old Veteran Chosen To Head Purple Heart Order

Cumberland, Md., Aug. 20 (AP).—Frank J. Schneller of Madison, Wis., was elected national commander of the Military Order of the Purple Heart today as some 350 delegates wound up a four-day convention here.

The 71-year-old veteran of the Spanish-American War and World War I, is the oldest man ever named to head the Purple Heart outfit, whose ranks are composed of former soldiers wounded in battle.

As national commander, Schneller succeeds Clifford A. Parmenter of Long Beach, Calif. Schneller was unopposed.

Mrs. Neta Ihbe of Milwaukee was elected president of the Women's auxiliary, succeeding Mrs. Beatrice Donovan of Baltimore.

Other national officers elected by the veterans included:

John Goodwin of Johnson City, Tenn., senior vice commander; Robert W. Schroeder of Milwaukee, judge advocate; Lloyd Tigge of Waukesha, Wis., and Joseph Trader of Detroit, sergeants at arms; Lloyd Henry of Hyattsville, Md., finance officer; John J. O'Connor, jr., of Baltimore, national inspector, and the Rev. Michael Halley of Wilkes-Barre, Pa., chaplain.

Frank Parmenter of Framingham, Mass., was named national welfare officer; Adolph Sutro of Hollywood, Calif., was selected chairman of the national legislative committee, and Richard D. Golick of Sheboygan, Wis., was chosen chairman of tthe publications committee.

Charles L. Gore of Baltimore was elected commander of Zone 2, which comprises Maryland, Pennsylvania, Delaware, New Jersey, New York and the District of Columbia.

Other auxiliary officers elected were Beatrice Parmenter of Long Beach, Calif., senior vice president, and May Keyes of Milwaukee, treasurer.

Jobless Payments Increase in D. C.

The number of unemployment checks distributed by the District Unemployment Compensation Board rose substantially during the fiscal year ending June 30, as compared to the previous year.

C. A. Wharton, director of the board, in his annual report to the commissioners, noted yesterday that the number of first payments rose from 13,015 to 14,270. The total of checks issued during the year went from 180,763 to 184,012.

This amounted to $352,861 more during fiscal 1949 than in the previous year. The totals amounted to $3,364,691 and $3,011,830.

A total of 18,485 employes were covered by the board this year, 243 more than last year. Benefit payments vary according to the unemployed person's previous work record and range from $6 to $20 for a maximum of 20 weeks.

Papers Served By Fraud, Says Sued Husband

An American lawyer who resides in Paris charged yesterday in District Court that he was served with divorce papers when he went to his wife's apartment here to talk over a possible reconciliation.

He is Melvin C. Smith, a former Army officer. The wife is Mrs. Florence C. Smith, of 4007 Connecticut ave. nw. They have a 12-year-old son.

Smith sought yesterday to have service of the wife's suit, which charges two years' desertion, set aside as fraudulently procured. Smith declared that he came to this country in June on business and that his wife got in touch with him indirectly and said she desired to talk over the possibility of reconciliation.

While in the wife's apartment, he said, on August 12, a deputy marshal suddenly came out of the bedroom and served him with the court process.

Gaelic Exhibit Here Honors Douglas Hyde

A special exhibit commemorating the death on July 12, of Douglas Hyde, eminent scholar, authority on the Gaelic language and literature, and first president of Eire, opened yesterday at the Library of Congress.

Included, from the Library's collection, are two autographed manuscripts with a letter of presentation to the library; a variety of Hyde's printed works, and a photograph of him autographed in Gaelic.

Aged 88 when he died, Hyde was revered for his long work to keep alive and spread the heritage of Gaelic culture. He visited the United States twice, serving as professor at Rutgers University in 1891, and later collecting funds for the Gaelic League.

D. C. Air Guard Ends Half of Field Training

Newcastle, Del., Aug. 20 (Spl.).—District Air National Guard units passed the halfway mark of their annual 15-day field training encampment here today, with the 121st White House Fighter Squadron playing a leading role in two major flying operations.

The 121st, led by Lieut. Col. Willard W. Millikan, 3346 Martha Custis dr., Arlington, produced a maximum effort of F-47 Thunderbolts in a morning bombing and strafing mission, and an afternoon fighter sweep.

The morning problem sent the squadron to the bombing and gunnery range at McGuire Air Force Base, Fort Dix, N. J., and the afternoon mission found it searching for "enemy" fighters at Newark, N. J., and Allentown and Harrisburg, Pa.

Ground Crewmen Praised

High praise for the efforts of ground crewmen in keeping aircraft flying was voiced by Col. Laidler B. Mackall, 4434 Garfield st. nw., commanding officer of the 113th Fighter Group. The group consists, in addition to the 121st, of the 142nd Squadron, Wilmington, Del., and 149th Squadron, Richmond, Va.

Latest figures show that the entire group has amassed an amazing record of 94 per cent of aircraft in commission on the field. The 121st leads the other squadrons with a record of 96.9 per cent.

The excellence of the record is emphasized by the fact that today's morning mission occurred less than five hours after an all-out 66-plane group night attack on "enemy" installations in an area extending 480 miles along the Atlantic Coast and 400 miles inland.

60-Plane Formation

Concerning this achievement, Col. Mackall said: "The ground crews worked with a minimum of rest to enable us to produce another 60-plane formation today. Their efforts are making it possible for us to make this training operation very successful."

Operational figures for the first five days of the encampment, released today, show the 113th Fighter Group has flown its planes a total of more than 1666 hours. Of these, 732 hours were flown by the three fighter squadrons' Thunderbolts. Fighters of the 121st rolled up 370 hours of the F-47 time.

The air units currently are being given an operational readiness test by Ninth Air Force examiners. The test will be concluded Monday night.

Sunday's schedule calls for all three squadrons to resume dive bombing and gunnery missions.

Greenbelt Sets Water Follies This Evening

Greenbelt's "Water Follies of 1949" an annual extravaganza of dancing, singing and well-rehearsed splashing—will be staged at 9 p. m. today in the Greenbelt pool.

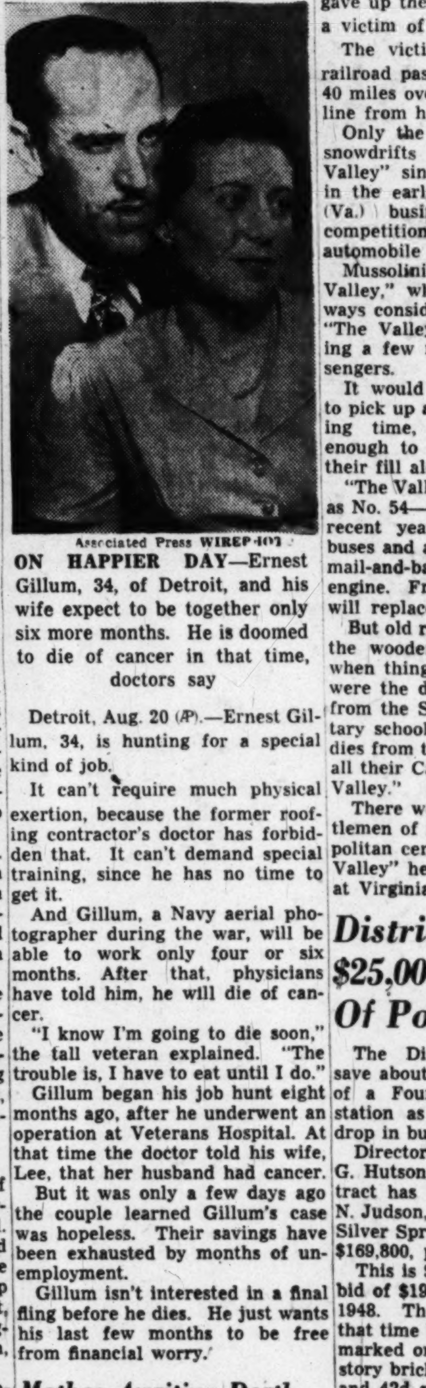
The show, sponsored by the Greenbelt Recreation Department, provides the highlight of the Maryland town's summer swimming program.

Worked in with a parade of water and deck ballets, fancy dives and fireworks will be the selection of a Water Follies Queen from among six local beauties sponsored by civic groups. The judges will be three Washington journalists.

The candidates for the throne are Betty Mae Gussio, 16, Miss National Guard; Jackie Hause, 19, Miss Rescue Squad; Norma Kerns, 15, Miss Youth Center; Rosemary Henessey, 16, Miss Consumer Service; Ruth Schwab, Miss Health Association; and Carolyn Garner, 19, Miss Fire Department.

Cancer Victim

Veteran Due To Die Hunts 6-Month Job



Associated Press WIREPHOTO

ON HAPPIER DAY—Ernest Gillum, 34, of Detroit, and his wife expect to be together only six more months. He is doomed to die of cancer in that time, doctors say Detroit, Aug. 20 (AP).—Ernest Gillum, 34, is hunting for a special kind of job.

It can't require much physical exertion, because the former roofing contractor's doctor has forbidden that. It can't demand special training, since he has no time to get it.

And Gillum, a Navy aerial photographer during the war, will be able to work only four or six months. After that, physicians have told him, he will die of cancer.

"I know I'm going to die soon," the tall veteran explained. "The trouble is, I have to eat until I do."

Gillum began his job hunt eight months ago, after he underwent an operation at Veterans Hospital. At that time the doctor told his wife, Lee, that her husband had cancer.

But it was only a few days ago the couple learned Gillum's case was hopeless. Their savings have been exhausted by months of unemployment.

Gillum isn't interested in a final fling before he dies. He just wants his last few months to be free from financial worry.

Mother Awaiting Death, Boy Has Party Early

North Randolph, Mass., Aug. 20 (AP).—Dwight Williams, 5, had his birthday party last night—three days early, because his mother was afraid she couldn't go to his party on Monday.

His mother, Mrs. Dale Williams, 42, who has four other children, is a cancer victim, and doctors said she might die "perhaps before Monday."

She smiled and kissed Dwight when he brought his cake to her bedside and blew out the five candles.

Later she told friends: "I'm ready to die. My only regret is leaving my wonderful husband and the children."

None of the children knows, she said.

Vorys said the Administration had not consulted House foreign affairs experts about the legislation.

Ohio Bloodhound Runs Down 3 Car Thieves

Sheffield Lake, Ohio, Aug. 20 (U.P.).—A bloodhound named King lived up to his name today.

Police called on King today to track down three young auto thieves. The bloodhound not only followed the thieves' trail through 4 miles of forest, but found the youths trying to steal another car on a side road and climbed right into the auto beside them.

Passenger Service Ends On Rail Line

Harpers Ferry, W. Va., Aug. 20 (Spl.).—An enduring milestone of American progress, 114 years old, gave up the ghost last week, itself a victim of progress.

The victim is "The Valley," a railroad passenger service running 40 miles over the B. & O.'s branch line from here to Strasburg, Va.

Only the Civil War, floods and snowdrifts have stopped "The Valley" since it was dreamed up in the early 1830s by Winchester (Va.) businessmen. Last week, competition from the bus and the automobile sidetracked it forever.

Mussolini would have hated "The Valley," whose timetable was always considered a mere formality. "The Valley" never minded waiting a few minutes for tardy passengers.

It would stop between stations to pick up a farmer. In berry-picking time, it would stop long enough to let passengers harvest their fill along the right of way.

"The Valley"—technically known as No. 54—could afford to relax in recent years. Competition from buses and autos left it with only a mail-and-baggage car behind the engine. From now on freight cars will replace the coach.

But old residents here remember the wooden rail days and after, when things were different. Those were the days when young blades from the Shenandoah Valley military schools and the charming ladies from the female seminaries in all their Cavalier finery rode "The Valley."

There were also ladies and gentlemen of fashion from the metropolitan centers who boarded "The Valley" here to "take the waters" at Virginia spas.

District to Save $25,000 on Cost Of Police Station

The District government will save about $25,000 on construction of a Fourteenth Precinct police station as a result of the recent drop in building costs.

Director of Construction Archie G. Hutson said yesterday the contract has been awarded to Victor N. Judson, Inc., 8644 Colesville rd., Silver Spring, Md., on a low bid of $169,800, plus $200 for a flagpole.

This is $25,000 less than the low bid of $195,591 submitted in June, 1948. The bids were rejected at that time because the city had earmarked only $167,000 for the two-story brick building at Benning rd. and 42d st. ne.

Additional authorization raising the allowed amount to $195,000 was granted by Congress.

Work is expected to begin in a week. The building will contain a witness room and 15 other rooms, plus a garage and cell facilities.

Driver Decides to Take Nap, Awakens Headed Into Quarry

Master Sergt. Roy E. Goodwin of Andrews Air Force Base had a real "nightmare" early yesterday morning—after he woke up.

The "bad dream" was finally dispelled by members of the Park Police, District Heights (Md.) Rescue Squad and the Morningside (Md.) Fire Department.

He Falls Asleep

The 26-year-old sergeant, driving back to his headquarters at Andrews Base, found himself getting sleepy at the wheel and decided to take a nap, he told police.

He was at the intersection of Suitland pkwy. and Suitland rd., and when he woke up his automobile was rolling slowly down a steep hill toward a 50-foot drop into an abandoned quarry.

He jammed on his footbrake, but the car continued to carry him, slowly, toward the cliff as the wheels slid over some gravel.

There 15 Minutes

Petrified, his foot frozen on the brake pedal, Sergeant Goodwin sat in his car for 15 minutes, inching forward, before his shouts for help were answered. Park Police Pvts. Norman H. Heller and George F. Clayton, who happened along in a cruiser, found him with his front wheels only a foot away from the cliff.

Lashing the cruiser's front bumpers to the rear of Goodwin's car, the officers called for more help. The rescue squad and the fire department forces responded and were able to pull both cars back to the highway.

Post Reporter

OUT of generations of obscurity, the post of White House military aide has now emerged onto the public stage, but it is still obscure. It is wrapped in a question mark.

What does a White House aide do, anyway; is he necessary, and why? Who started the practice of appointing presidential aides and on what authority? How long has the post been in existence?

Taking the last question first, there have been presidential aides since George Washington, though for many years the job was more ornamental than useful. Probably the first indispensable presidential aide was Lieut. Col. William W. S. Bliss, who drove a sprightly quill for the nearly illiterate Zachary Taylor.

Washington came to the Presidency direct from command of the Continental Army, and he took to New York with him one David Humphreys, former aide and lieutenant colonel. Then, in 1790, Washington appointed Humphreys first United States Minister to Portugal.

There are reports that Alexander Hamilton, even after he became the young Nation's first Secretary of the Treasury, was regarded as aide to President Washington and in line for command of the Army should it have to take the field.

New Military Burdens

THE authority for appointment of White House aides lies in the Constitution itself. By establishing the President as Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy, it gives him the power to detail officers to any post he sees fit. If he chooses to detail one or more as his aides, that is within his rights.

But with some notable exceptions, it was not customary until comparatively recently to detail officers to full-time duty on the President's personal staff. This practice undoubtedly resulted, as did so many changes in White House organization and routine, from the increasing burden of work the President has had to assume. Since 1938, a great deal of this burden has been connected with the armed services; prior to that time, the duties of White House aides were largely social and, in some cases, connected with the intimate personal business of the President.

Where the history of White House aides can be traced, it is apparent that those who entered this category were friends and often military companions of the President before his election. In one case, that of Archibald Willingham (Archie) Butt, an aide made himself so useful and so agreeable that the President became his warm personal friend as a result of his service.

There have been some notable soldiers among those who have served on the personal staffs of Presidents. One of these was Capt. Meriwether Lewis, who was private secretary to President Thomas Jefferson before setting out with Capt. William Clark on the famous expedition which called the attention of Americans to the great land behind the Eastern mountains.

John Hay, private secretary to Abraham Lincoln throughout the war, was appointed a lieutenant colonel and assistant adjutant general, United States Volunteers, while he held that post. This appointment seems to have been consonant with the custom of preceding years, when all military aides who can be traced were designated as private secretaries to Presidents.

Held Subsequent Command

ONE of the most useful of these was the Brevet Lieutenant Colonel Bliss who served President Zachary Taylor. Bliss had been Taylor's chief of staff during "Old Rough and Ready's" Mexican campaign, and served as his private secretary from Taylor's election in 1849 until the President's death in 1850. An 1833 graduate of the United States Military Academy, Bliss was Taylor's son-in-law (another was Jefferson Davis), and after his friend and commander's death he went on to command the Western Division of the Army, where he died of yellow fever in 1853 at 38.

After Grant's term, it appears that the office of White House aide was exercised ex officio by the Army officers detailed as Superintendent of Public Buildings and Grounds. This practice seems to have continued until Theodore Roosevelt appointed the first officer to become noted for his service as White House aide.

Archie Butt was a Georgian who had been a newspaper correspondent and had served in the Philippines during the insurrection. Roosevelt appointed him chief aide in May, 1908, and William Howard Taft kept him in the post until Butt's death in the Titanic disaster April 15, 1912. Butt's personal popularity was great in Washington and both Roosevelt and Taft regarded him with great affection. He held the rank of major while White House aide.

Publication in 1924 and 1930 of his "Letters" revealed the close and affectionate relationship which existed between Taft and Roosevelt and the growing strain which eventually led Roosevelt to oppose Taft for the Presidency in 1912 and assure election of Woodrow Wilson. Mark Sullivan, in "Our Times," makes the point that Butt's sense of loyalty was the cause, at least indirectly, of his death.

According to Sullivan, the emotional tension resulting from his inability to bring his loyalty for Roosevelt into focus with that he felt for Taft resulted in a physical illness. Taft sent him to a European "cure" and he was returning from there when the Titanic went down in the icy waters off Newfoundland.

From Taft to Coolidge, it appears that the Superintendents of Buildings and Grounds continued to serve as White House aides as an additional duty. Of course, a certain number of young officers of both Army and Navy have for many years been detailed as White House aides during their services in Washington, being called upon to be decorative and to assist with arrangements during White House receptions. These officers, however, were not aides in the sense that White House aides have come to be known as such in recent years; they were not identified with the White House in their normal assignments.

It was Theodore Roosevelt, by the way, who appointed the first aides from the naval service. These officers were Brig. Gen. Charles A. McCawley, of the Marine Corps, who served from 1902 to 1906, and Comdr. William S. Sims, the World War I admiral, who served as aide from 1906 to 1908.

President Harding raised much controversy and more amusement by his appointment of Dr. Charles E. Sawyer, his personal physician from Marion, Ohio, to be a brigadier general and installed him as the White House physician. Although the slight, bearded General Sawyer was not strictly an aide, neither was he a military man, and the figure he cut in uniform, with his pointed beard jutting over the high collar of those days, did not add to Harding's prestige. Harding, though, had some precedent in Wilson's appointment of Cary T. Grayson, his personal physician, to be Rear Admiral, an appointment softened somewhat by the fact that Grayson was a Naval Academy graduate and a Navy surgeon.

'Magnificent Presents . . .'

"EVERY man, woman and child in Washington is a politician. The people inhale politics with the air they breathe, and talk and think of but little else. Every man seems to be under the impression that he has influence in some part of the Government, did he but choose to exert it . . . Many of the residents, of both sexes, do seek to exercise this influence, which may be either real or fancied, and their ranks are swelled every winter by fresh arrivals from other parts of the country of persons equally impressed with the idea that they, too, have influence with Congress, or the Government, which they mean to exert in every possible manner . . ."

"The parties interested in the schemes for which Government aid is asked begin their operations by supposing that they must have some energetic, active agent in Washington to keep the scheme before Congress and the Government, and urge upon the members and officials a compliance with their demands. Forthwith, an agent with full powers is dispatched to the Capital . . ."

"It is very common for the lobbyists to approach public men through their families. Mrs. A. or Mrs. B. will receive magnificent presents from persons who are but little more than casual acquaintances . . ."

"Mrs. Lincoln was much sought after by the lobbyists, who, knowing that they would not dare to hint at a bribe to the President, loaded her with flattery and presents. She was not deceived by them, however, and made good use of them to secure the reelection of her husband . . ."

—From "The Sights and Secrets of the National Capital," by Dr. John B. Ellis, published in 1869.

One of President Coolidge's aides was Col. Osmun Latrobe, a colorful soldier of fortune. Coolidge met him during a vacation in the Black Hills of the Dakotas in 1927 and was impressed with his appearance, his bearing and his ability as a story-teller. Latrobe also served President Herbert Hoover briefly before returning to duty with the Army.

'Pa' Watson's Advent

PRESIDENT HOOVER'S second military aide was Lieut. Col. Campbell B. Hodges, who remained with him throughout his administration and served President Roosevelt some three months. Then President Roosevelt appointed Lieut. Col. Edwin M. Watson, who remained with him until Watson's death at sea February 20, 1945.

"Pa" Watson, whom Mr. Roosevelt quickly made a major general, was probably the most photographed individual on the White House staff and certainly the most photographed aide. His sturdy figure and great strength made him extremely useful in supporting the President when it was necessary for him to move about or even to stand. Physically, he was as indispensable to Mr. Roosevelt as Colonel Bliss was indispensable culturally to Zachary Taylor. Watson was unique in another respect: he was appointed secretary to the President after the illness of Marvin McIntyre and received a salary considerably above that he would have got as major general.

He was the bottleneck through which those who wished to see the busy President were squeezed, and his adroitness in turning aside would-be callers without hurting their feelings was proverbial. Several times during his tenure as aide Watson was mentioned for political office, and, in the Army at least, he was credited with having great influence over promotions. He died while returning with Mr. Roosevelt from the Yalta conference and was buried in Arlington.

During the few weeks between Watson's death and Mr. Roosevelt's, the post was held by Col. Richard Park, jr. Then Vice President Harry S. Truman took office and brought Col. Harry H. Vaughan along with him as military aide.

Vice Presidential Precedent

MR. TRUMAN was the first Vice President in history who had a military aide. Vaughan had been secretary to Mr. Truman in his capacity as United States Senator since 1940, and the new Vice President wanted to take him along. President Roosevelt then placed Vaughan, a Reserve lieutenant colonel, on active duty and detailed him to Vice President Truman. Vaughan was promoted to colonel September 16, 1944, to brigadier general June 18, 1945, and to major general June 6, 1946, with date of rank of November 14, 1944.

Thus, as in so many previous cases, the incoming President brought with him for the intimate and personal job of military aide an old friend whom he knew, liked and trusted. As in the case of other aides, General Vaughan's official duties are whatever may be assigned by the President.

One innovation has come into the staff of aides since Vaughan's incumbency. This is a special insignia for White House aides, who previously had worn the device of their branch or that of the General Staff Corps. The present insignia, worn on the blouse lapels below the letters "U. S.," consist of the President's seal, with the exception that the 48 stars are in the gold circle surrounding the device rather than in the blue field.

Vaughan wears it, as does Brig. Gen. Robert B. Landry, first Air Force aide. There is no place for it on the blue uniform of Rear Adm. Robert L. Dennison, Mr. Truman's naval aide.

NATIONAL AFFAIRS

Taft-Hartley, Two Years Old, Is Still Moot

By Max Hall

Associated Press Labor Reporter

ON MONDAY, the Taft-Hartley Act will have been in effect two years.

The National Labor Relations Board and the courts have been interpreting this staggeringly complex law and applying it to actual cases. Some provisions are still pretty much unexplored, but steady progress has been made.

Congress didn't change a syllable of the law this year, though changes had been widely expected. The White House and labor unions worked for repeal. Senator Taft (R., Ohio) himself tried to make some changes (though not nearly enough to suit labor unions) in order to clarify enough to suit labor some obscure provisions.

When Taft's program won in the Senate, labor leaders and Democratic Party leaders suddenly lost interest.

Rather than allow Taft to improve the law—with a Republican bill that kept injunctions and other big Taft-Hartley features—they chose to let it stand until they can drum up enough strength to crush out all or most of it. They hope to do this in the 1950 congressional elections.

Squeezed Into Line

THE NONCOMMUNIST provision is perhaps the most thoroughly interpreted part of the Taft-Hartley Act.

Union officers must sign non-Communist oaths or else a union can't charge an employer with an unfair labor practice. It can't even get on a ballot in a plant election.

The effect has been that most noncomplying unions have been squeezed, raided, defeated and weakened to the point where lately even extreme left-wing unions have been falling into line. The only major unions which haven't complied are the United Mine Workers, the AFL International Typographical Union and a handful of CIO leftist unions.

Some of the least explored subjects include:

The provision that bans a union from charging excessive initiation fees. (Not a single case has reached the NLRB and nobody knows how high an "excessive" fee is.)

The provision that requires a union or an employer to give notice 60 days before ending or changing a contract. (NLRB officials are rather dismayed because the provision contains apparent contradictions and leaves some vast questions unanswered).

The provision that bans "featherbedding."

Some provisions have been greatly clarified. For example, the question of mass picketing. The NLRB has ruled that picketing violates the act if it results in "physical obstruction" of a plant entrance but that vile name-calling on a picket line isn't in itself a violation.

The Taft-Hartley Act bans mass picketing by banning restraint and coercion of employes. It doesn't use the word "picketing" at all.

ITU Case Is Biggest

THE LAW doesn't contain the term "closed shop" either, but it bans the closed shop by banning discrimination against nonunion workers.

The biggest closed shop case yet to arise—and in most respects the broadest case of any kind under the act—is the case (actually five cases) involving the International Typographical Union, now pending before the five-man NLRB.

NLRB trial examiners differed on some questions but all found the ITU guilty of violating the act by causing employers to hire only ITU members.

In the biggest union shop case, the NLRB ruled illegal the clause in John L. Lewis' contracts with coal mines owned by steel companies. This clause says all miners must "become" members of the United Mine Workers.

(The closed shop calls for hiring only union members. The union shop calls for workers to join the union after being hired.)

The board said Lewis had not gone through the required preliminaries toward getting a union shop contract. The board also said Lewis violated the act by causing a strike over this issue last summer.

The national emergency situation remains the same as last fall. President Truman has invoked the provision in seven cases, all of them in 1948. Two were in coal, two were in the maritime industry and one each in the atomic, meat and telephone industries. In four cases 80-day injunctions were obtained—two maritime, one coal, one atomic.

Another part of the law authorizes temporary injunctions during the trial of unfair labor practice cases.

27 Injunctions Granted

AS OF LAST WEEK, here is the two-year record on that kind of injunction, according to NLRB officials:

NLRB General Counsel Robert N. Denham has asked for 52 injunctions against unions which he has charged with a secondary boycott (a union attempt to force one company to stop doing business with another company).

The law requires him to seek an injunction every time he prosecutes a union on that charge. The courts have granted 27 of these injunctions and denied nine, and the other 16 cases were either settled or are still pending.

Denham also has discretionary authority to seek a temporary injunction when prosecuting a union or employer on any charge at all.

He has sought four of these injunctions against unions and two against employers (none of them in the past year). The courts have granted two against unions and one against an employer.

Denham and the NLRB have been locked in a fundamental disagreement over applying the Taft-Hartley Act to small businesses. Denham thinks it ought to be applied to any company, no matter how small, if it affects interstate commerce. The board has ruled that it has a right to refuse to consider the case if the effect is "remote and insubstantial."

The dispute really centers in a further question.

The Taft-Hartley Act gave the general counsel sole authority to decide whether to prosecute an unfair labor practice case. Denham says that when he decides to prosecute, the board must decide the case one way or the other and has no right to refuse consideration.

But the board keeps right on rejecting unfair practice cases which it considers trivial. Denham says this is an unlawful "veto" of his powers.

That dispute may some day be settled by the courts.

'5 Per Cent' Prosecutor A Departure From Type

By Jack Bell

Associated Press Staff Writer

THE SENATE'S long line of fire-eating prosecutors—the Wheelers, LaFollettes, Nyes and Fergusons, to mention a few—has been broken by the courtly gentleman in charge of the inquiry into Washington's "5-percenters."

Seventy-two-year-old Clyde R. Hoey of North Carolina—long-haired, frock-coated, carnation-adorned—who heads the Senate Expenditures subcommittee investigating alleged connections of high Government officials with those who winnow contracts for pay, breaks all the rules.

Senators of recent years remember the vitriolic, gesticulating Burton K. Wheeler, who came out of Montana to cow the mighty of Wall Street with a sarcasm that pierced any armor. They recall the cold, calculating incisiveness of Robert M. LaFollette, jr., who pinned steel magnates to the wall in the Little Steel investigation, gave labor one of its best breaks in congressional investigations.

The recollect the devastating irony of Gerald P. Nye of North Dakota, a man who was proud to be known as an isolationist, as he made munitions makers squirm in the witness chair. More recently they think of the endless boring with which Senator Homer Ferguson of Michigan, once dubbed Detroit's "one-man grand jury," went after perspiring military men in the investigation of the Pearl Harbor disaster.

Not like any of these is soft-spoken Clyde Hoey.

Truman Traits

IN THE opinion of his colleagues Hoey comes closer to the characteristics displayed by Harry S. Truman when he was chairman of the Senate's War Investigating Committee.

Mr. Truman, who may be President today because of that chairmanship, never was the browbeating type of investigator. He had a good staff and he let the committee employes and other committee members carry the ball except on rare occasions.

But his native Missouri curiosity always had to be satisfied.

Hoey, a wing collar addict who often wears high top shoes to boot, has something of the same tenacity about him.

Some critics say the North Carolina Senator is on a spot. He is listed as an Administration Senator, but most of the information his committee has brought out has reflected on Administration officials.

SENATOR CLYDE HOEY
Frock-coated, carnation-adorned

Hoey has shown his worry by hurrying to the White House to talk to President Truman about some of these revelations before they were put officially into the committee's records.

Doesn't Cuss

DESPITE his name, which rhymes with whooie, Hoey seldom has been ridiculed by his political enemies. He worked up in politics the hard way.

Son of a Confederate Army captain, he went to work in a Shelby, N. C., printer's office as printer's devil at the age of 12. By the time he was 17 he owned the paper.

At 20, Hoey was elected to the State Legislature. He topped off his career in North Carolina by election as Governor in 1936 after having served a brief term in Congress. He won his Senate seat in 1944.

A Sunday school teacher most of his adult life, Hoey doesn't cuss, chew, smoke or drink. Even-tempered, he gets along fine with his colleagues, some of whom say his temper is likely to be tested to the nth degree before he gets through with the five percenter investigation.

WORLD AFFAIRS

Red 'Siege' of Tito Hints Desperation

By Arthur Schlesinger, Jr.

Pulitzer Prize-Winning Historian and Associate Professor of History at Harvard

THE Kremlin last week had its hands full trying to cope with troubles in what only a short time ago had been its own backyard. The basic trouble was the deep, insurgent nationalism within the satellite states of eastern Europe; and the immediate irritation and stubborn embodiment of that nationalism was the Tito regime in Yugoslavia.

In Europe as well as in Asia, the Soviet Union had systematically stirred up nationalism as a weapon first against Germany and then against the western democracies. But this very spirit of nationalism, so useful to the Communists when they were seeking power, was now becoming itself an obstacle to Soviet control. The insistent Soviet demands upon the satellite states had brought to life nationalist feelings even within the Communist parties of eastern Europe. And, in the case of Yugoslavia, the geographical remoteness from the Red army had enabled Marshal Tito to throw off the intolerable Russian bonds.

This happened over a year ago; and the continued survival of the Tito regime in defiance of Soviet excommunication has made it the most urgent of all threats to Soviet power. The heresy of Titoism must be stamped out or the orthodoxy of Stalinism, dependent on a belief in the apostolic infallibility of Moscow, would suffer blows. The increased tempo last week of the diplomatic in-fighting between the USSR and Yugoslavia showed that tension was increasing. Either the Soviet Union was growing desperate; or else it believed that its clandestine attempts to overthrow Tito were on the brink of success.

In a note to Tito, broadcast over the Moscow radio to Yugoslavia, the Soviet government announced to the Yugoslav people that the Tito regime was "an enemy and adversary of the Soviet Union." Next, Moscow recalled its ambassador from Belgrade, ostentatiously omitting to name a successor. Pravda began to devote the bulk of its foreign news columns to reports of Yugoslav iniquity; and the satellite press stepped up its campaign of vituperation against Tito. From Yugoslavia itself came convincing stories of Soviet sabotage operations, directed in particular at the great hydroelectric power installations.

More and more the Soviet offensive against Yugoslavia seemed reminiscent of the Nazi campaign against Czechoslovakia in the summer of 1938. According to reports from Belgrade, Tito feared that the USSR, in tapering off the civil war in Greece, would open a new guerilla war designed to drive the Yugoslavs out of Macedonia. But the Yugoslav leader showed every confidence.

Speaking at Skiplje, the capital of Yugoslav Macedonia, he called upon the people of Bulgaria and Albania to overthrow the "pseudo-Marxists" and "megalomaniacs" who ruled them. Speaking to the officers of the Yugoslav garrisons along the southern frontier, he proclaimed that the Yugoslav army was ready to fight any invader, including the Red army.

In the meantime, Tito began to look about for possible allies. Last week he came up with valuable American support when Dean Acheson won his fight to grant Yugoslavia permission to buy steel mill equipment in the United States. Defense Secretary Johnson had opposed this project, either on the theory that Stalin and Tito were about to make up, or on the even more improbable ground that Tito, unlike Chiang Kai-shek or Franco, was too abandoned a person to deserve the moral approval of the Defense Department. In the end Johnson sided with Acheson. Acheson's victory on this issue seemed likely to be followed by a loan from the World Bank. There were also indications that Yugoslavia would move by direct negotiation to settle its difficulties with Greece.

Bidault Points a Way

THE rest of Europe in the meantime kept up its struggle toward some greater measure of political and economic unification. At Strasbourg, the French continued to press the Council of Europe for concrete action. "A united Europe can come about," observed Georges Bidault, "only by giving some sovereignty . . . We are not here to enumerate difficulties but to overcome them." But the British still preferred to concentrate on enumeration, even if Herbert Morrison and the Labor bloc gave more ground than had been expected in the direction of the middle-of-the-road unity views of Winston Churchill.

The west German elections, where the conservative Christian Democrats won an unexpected victory, confronted the council with the problem of admitting the new government. In spite of Churchill's plea for immediate admission, it seemed likely that the matter would be held over at Paris. In the meantime, ECA Administrator Paul Hoffman aided the unity movement by telling the Marshall Plan countries that they could relieve Europe's dollar crisis only by increasing their progress toward the establishment of a single European market.

In the United States, the Second Circuit Court threw out the Maryland anti-subversive or so-called Ober law on the ground of unconstitutionality. This law had won general criticism for the harshness and vagueness of its provisions. And President Truman appealed to the country to keep an open mind until Harry Vaughan had a chance to rebut the increasingly discreditable evidence accumulating against him.

Tito Carving New Capital for Montenegro

By Alex H. Singleton

Associated Press Staff Writer

TITOGRAD, YUGOSLAVIA.—As the old legends have it, God's chariot girdled the globe as he created mountains from a sack full of rocks. When he reached Montenegro the sack split. The contents spilled upon this little land a rocky blessing—and a barren curse for centuries.

Mountain-girdled Montenegro found a freedom unparalleled in the Balkans behind its steep crags until World War II came. Then the bomb bays of big planes slid open and spilled forth destruction to end the security of a legend.

Here in the heart of Montenegro the people are building a future under difficult conditions from the rocks and ruins and rubble of their past. It's a tough task, and its success may not be measured completely for more than a generation.

Partisan Battleground

TITOGRAD—formerly a sleepy, isolated country town called Podgorica, literally "Under the Mountain"—was almost totally destroyed during the war, first by Allied bombs upon German and Italian targets and later by violent fighting between Marshal Tito's Partisans and the rival Chetniks.

It began rebuilding with the war's end. Its future then was uncertain. So were its people, who came trekking back from mountain hideouts and Partisan strongholds.

Life had been simple. The women did most of the work, tilling an unwilling soil, tending the livestock. The men were largely mountaineers. Little more than two centuries ago, a man was hardly regarded as a man unless he had the head of an enemy mounted upon his spear outside the lodge.

It's different even now.

Partly because it had become a symbol of independence and stamina, partly because of its untapped potentialities, Marshall Tito picked out Podgorica to become the capital of Montenegro.

On July 13, 1946, the anniversary of the day the Montenegrins rose against the German invaders, he dedicated the town to a bright place in the "new Yugoslavia." Reconstruction work began in earnest.

Shade Trees Later

IN A scooped-out basin within a rim of mountains the nucleus of a new city has been created—ugly at the moment in the dust of construction, hot without the shade trees the government plans to plant.

Right now Titograd looks like a typical frontier town of the time when the Western part of the United States was expanding. There are no cowboys, but their role is filled by militiamen. Yugoslavia is hard by the border of Albania, and no love is lost between the two countries.

By the year's end the Yugoslav republic of Montenegro hopes to shift its capital from Cetinje to Titograd, away from the tradition-steeped atmosphere of old monasteries to a setting strictly modern.

It seems possible. In perhaps Yugoslavia's most concentrated building project, scores of apartments have been constructed, modern government buildings are nearing completion. Park bushes which crumpled under the feet of occupation troops are being replaced.

There's no estimate on the total cost of the project. Much of the work has been done by Tito's "voluntary" work brigades.

Montenegro's importance as a cornerstone of Yugoslavia's independence remains. Perhaps that's one reason why work is being hustled here to make it as solid as its mountains.

One U. S. Sea Force Ready for Battle

By Clarke Beach

Associated Press Staff Writer

THE Navy's biggest continuous operation on the high seas today is its Mediterranean force, called the Sixth Task Fleet.

It is the only United States fleet permanently organized, fully manned and ready to fight. The rest of the Navy's 682 active ships are scattered, most of them only at peacetime strength.

The Mediterranean fleet has a sharp significance—political, diplomatic and military. And it is doing things to the peoples of the Mediterranean and the men of the United States Navy—making them friendlier, more understanding and more respectful toward one another.

The United States has had a strong fleet in the Mediterranean Sea since the 1942 invasion of North Africa. It has had a few ships there off and on for about 150 years.

Adm. Richard L. Conolly, at the head of all United States Navy operations in that part of the world, says a strong American fleet should be kept in the Mediterranean permanently. His title is Commander in Chief, U. S. Naval Force, Eastern Atlantic and Mediterranean.

A Beachhead Force

At his headquarters in London he recently gave his views to this reporter and three other newspapermen who visited him and later sailed with the Mediterranean fleet on maneuvers.

"We are now a Mediterranean power," said Conolly. "By having our fleet there, we are demonstrating our interest in the Mediterranean countries. The Mediterranean fleet already has stiffened the determination of the Greeks and Turks to maintain their independence."

The Navy's official statement of reasons for keeping naval units in the eastern Atlantic and Mediterranean says they are there: "(1) To support the Allied occupation forces and the Allied military government . . . (2) to protect United States interests and support United States policies in the areas."

The Mediterranean fleet consists normally of about 20 ships—an aircraft carrier, two cruisers, about 10 destroyers and supporting units. If trouble developed, it could assist the 5000 American troops in Trieste. With its reinforced battalion of 1200 Marines, it could hold a small beachhead to get Americans out.

The Mediterranean fleet has no base in that sea. It can only visit the ports, cannot stay long anywhere. At most ports it remains only three or four days.

At each port there is an elaborate exchange of courtesies with officials on shore. The commander of the fleet, Vice Admiral Forrest Sherman, and two rear admirals under his command visit the governor, the mayor and the commanders of the local army and navy forces. Then each of these return the visit.

They are entertained ashore and reciprocate with dinners and receptions aboard ship. Each visit is a goodwill mission. Sherman and his two rear admirals endeavor to anchor their flagships at neighboring ports, so that no two of them will be in one port at the same time—the better to extend their contacts with local officials. Since the British also have a fleet similarly meandering the same area, the local dignitaries are kept pretty busy.

Sherman's diplomatic chores are often quite strenuous. One Sunday morning in Athens he was guest of honor at three church services—Greek Orthodox, where worshipers stand throughout the service, the Anglican service and a Roman Catholic mass.

The public is often invited to visit the American ships, and they go in throngs. Last Thanksgiving every ship in the fleet invited children aboard for dinner, fed about 1000 of them.

The guest book in Sherman's cabin contains a galaxy of famous autographs. One whole page is devoted to the signature of Edward, Duke of Windsor. The King and Queen of Greece had a page to themselves until their three children came aboard next day and signed underneath their parents' names.

Sherman blends well with the Mediterranean world—brilliant and intense, urbane and elegantly gay. He sailed in that sea in the First World War and has made a study of it ever since. He has read and remembered much of its history, mythology, politics, economics and geography. He speaks a little French, but an obstacle looms occasionally. He easily hurdles it with a quick chuckle and a well-told joke.

He keeps his command constantly busy with training programs. His planes are flying, his gunners are firing, and his radar experts are continually picking up simulated attacks. On the recent maneuvers, when nothing else was doing he kept his provision ships and tankers busy transferring cargoes and fuel while under way.

With techniques developed late in the last war ships making high speeds can take on cargoes by "high line transfers." Even the large contingents of Marines are transferred, riding from one ship to another in a seat sliding along a line on a pulley.

A Linguistic Bypass

For the past five months the Marines have been making practice landings on Malta, with British approval. On the recent maneuvers they landed on Crete, through an arrangement with the Greek government.

Except for Sherman's immediate staff, the entire complement of ships and men is replaced about every four months. Tens of thousands of Navy men have now served in the Mediterranean.

Sherman tries to make it interesting for them, giving them time to visit places of interest and providing them with brief mimeographed descriptive articles.

"One of my jobs is to run a kind of tourist service," he laughs. "Sometimes I give them the clockwise tour, sometimes the counterclockwise tour. I think the counterclockwise tour is the most popular."

This one starts in North Africa, where the picturesque Moslem towns amuse the boys briefly. It goes east to Turkey, then follows the north shore westward, reaching a climax at Nice, France.

All the men seemed to go for the French Riviera in a big way. Sherman tries to keep the ships there long enough for the men to make a quick trip to Paris.

U. N. Is an Abstract to Orphāns, But ICEF Means a Cup of Milk

By Frank Gervasi
Post Reporter

ROME.—The Mother Superior at St. Joseph's Orphanage, out on the Via Nomentana, knew less about the United Nations than most people. She did not know that it had stopped two or three little wars, and was even ignorant of the fact that right here in her own country the Food and Agriculture Organization, a U. N. subsidiary, had saved the valuable chestnut crop from blight.

But the Mother Superior did know about ICEF. Her face lighted with appreciation at the name. So will yours, perhaps, when you learn that ICEF—the U. N.'s International Children's Emergency Fund—may have saved a million lives in Italy, and possibly as many as four millions in Europe, since the war ended.

The Mother Superior motioned me to follow her down a long, high-ceilinged corridor. It was 11:30 in the morning and all the kids were indoors for merenda, a pre-lunch snack. The nun stopped at a double door and threw it open.

"ICEF milk," she said, and waved her hands at the scene.

It was a huge room, cool with the hot Roman sun shuttered out. Three or four hundred moppets ranging in age from 20 months to 8 or 9 years sat on either side of long board tables.

You could not tell them apart very well. Their heads had been shaved and looked like so many coconuts. All wore pink cotton pinafores or aprons over rudimentary underwear. Tie-on sandals served for shoes.

Heads turned toward the door for 30 seconds, then all returned to the job in hand, which was downing the contents of pint-sized enamel cups. Some of the smaller ones had to be helped by novitiates.

"Every day," the Mother Superior said, "they get milk at this hour. Later, about half past one, they get their lunch. There will be stew today with meat and rice from ICEF.

"We get medicine from ICEF, too, and cod liver oil and other things. I do not know how we could feed all these children on our limited resources. We have 700 altogether. The older ones are in another refectory. There are too many here. There are too many everywhere like these."

The children in St. Joseph's were, for the most part, the survivors of parents killed by the war or who died of the diseases of war's aftermath. Some of the younger ones were foundlings abandoned by parents too poor to care for them.

They were not the healthiest kids in the world. Many had tonsilitis, ear infections and adenoids. Some had ugly skin scabs. But they were alive. And without ICEF help they might be dead or, like hundreds of thousands of others, scavenging the garbage dumps of cities and villages for food.

Yes, Italy, like the rest of Europe, is "recovering." Four years have gone and the rubble has been cleared away, the smoke pours again from factories' chimneys and the fields are reviving. Houses have been repaired and new ones built.

But here, as in other European countries and in China, Indonesia and the Middle East, the war is not over for millions of children and mothers and expectant mothers.

In Italy, you do not see them on the tourist beats of Rome, Florence and Venice. You are aware of them only when the children, skinny and dirty, come to beg at the cafe tables or to pick up the butts of discarded cigarettes whose tobacco is salvaged, sold and remade into more cigarettes.

Or you become aware of them when you visit the Quartiere Flaminio. There the war is not over for 367 families who live in caves, airless, lightless bomb shelters and huts built of trash—a few sticks, some flattened-out gallon tins.

The Quartiere Flaminio makes the Hoovervilles of our Great Depression look like health resorts. Its 1836 inhabitants draw their water from a single public tap and are ravaged by typhoid, paratyphoid, dysentery and tuberculosis.

Angelina Castellani, 24, stands in front of her "home" in Rome's Quartiere Flaminio. It is a cracked, airless, lightless bomb shelter. Mrs. Castellani's first child died of starvation, her second is ill of malnutrition in a Rome hospital. Her husband is in jail for stealing chickens which he sold to buy macaroni for his family. Mrs. Castellani and the child in her arms were saved by ICEF food, but ICEF can't house them

Aggravated Since War

THE problem of rescuing Europe's children for useful citizenry was staggering enough when the war ended. Some 14 million children, enough to populate a good-sized nation, were left parentless and homeless. Millions more have been born since.

Many were saved by wartime outfits like the much-maligned UNRRA. Many others became wards of their own countries as these gradually recovered from political and economic chaos.

But for millions more, according to welfare experts who have studied the problems at first hand, there is little hope unless existing agencies are given greater support than they are now getting or are likely to receive in the next two or three crucial years.

The notion is spreading that food has become plentiful in Europe. But everywhere I have been except Britain and Sweden and Finland, food is abundant only for those who have money with which to buy it. Misery, while mitigated and in some areas even eradicated by Marshall aid billions, is still widespread.

In the Europe west of the Iron Curtain, at least, people have achieved two of the Four Freedoms. They can speak and worship freely. But they are far from achieving freedom from fear and freedom from want.

In the last five months, I have talked to enough hungry, sick and desperate people to be convinced that a good many would swap the first two for more of the third and fourth, particularly in France and Italy.

The Marshall Plan, although it has worked miracles in industrial and agricultural recovery, has not yet reached those at the lower levels—those still unemployed, still homeless, still scrabbling among the ruins.

Feeding time at an ICEF milk bar in Rome. There seems to be some concern whether the supply will hold out

"Marshall aid," said an unemployed worker in Latina recently, "has meant white bread instead of black. But I'm still hungry and my bambini are hungry and my wife is sick."

TB and VD Attacked

THE only instruments for reaching the children of poverty-plagued homes seem to be those of the United Nations, particularly ICEF. And the cost of saving lives seems to be small compared to that of destroying them.

This year ICEF is spending in Italy about $11,200,000. That sum will not only provide supplementary feeding for about 1,000,000 children and 30,000 mothers; it will also finance a perhaps even more far-reaching medical program.

Hunger is only one of the by-products of war. Syphilis and tuberculosis are others. A year ago last May, the ICEF mission here launched a program for treating pregnant mothers afflicted with VD in Rome, Naples and Sicily. It also began mass immunization against TB.

But what may turn out to be the most important project undertaken by ICEF is milk pasteurization. For an outlay of only $250,000, a plant is being installed in Sicily, where infant mortality largely traceable to contaminated milk was among the worst in Italy.

For generations Sicilian children got their milk from cows brought to the doorsteps of their homes by itinerant vendors. Junior held out his cup and the man squirted milk into it. Flies covered cow, milkman, Junior and his cup. Junior usually died before he was a year old and his chances of surviving until age 5 were only about one in five.

Extermination of flies and mosquitoes, with resultant decrease in deaths from intestinal diseases and malaria, have also been undertaken by ICEF in Sicily and Sardinia. In Sardinia, the antifly campaign was so successful that infant mortality has dropped from 106 per thousand to 68 and continues downward. There are so few cases of malaria on the island now that recently they had a difficult time digging up a case for laboratory study.

Cloth and Leather

ICEF's operations in the 12 neediest countries of Europe, including several Soviet satellites, cost only $55,500.000 this year. The bill covered powdered milk, canned meat and fish, cod liver oil, medicines—and raw materials. The Fund brings in cotton for cloth for diapers, woolens for warm clothing and leather for shoes. The stuff is made up locally, the individual countries paying all manufacturing costs and supplying transportation and storage facilities.

Only four million of the several times that many known to need help will be reached by ICEF aid in Europe. Russia neither contributes nor receives ICEF aid, but 28 nations are chipping in to support the Fund and 33 are getting help. The United States puts up 72 cents for every 28 cents contributed by another country.

But no money handed out by Uncle Sam since the war ended has accomplished more. For half the cost of an aircraft carrier, millions of children will live tomorrow who might have died yesterday.

Ask the Mother Superior what ICEF has meant at St. Joseph's Orphanage, out on the Via Nomentana, about half a mile up the road from where one of the men who made ICEF necessary, Benito Mussolini, used to live in the Villa Torlonia. (It is an Overseas School, now, for the children of American residents.)

"Well," the nun will tell you, "the children can do their lessons now. They seem to have more energy for their work and they learn more quickly. It is the food, of course."

Britain Doesn't Rate All the Blame

The following was the lead article in the Economist of London for August 13. It appeared under the title, "Britain in the Pillory." It is reprinted in part by permission.

THE DECISION of His Majesty's government to put the dollar crisis into cold storage for the time being has been successful insofar as they themselves and the country at large are concerned. Ministers have dispersed to various centers of rest and recuperation and John Bull has gone to the seaside. But the decision to leave the country apparently without a policy to utter or spokesmen to utter it has had much less success abroad.

In Europe and in the United States, the silence has been filled by a steadily swelling chorus of criticism and attack. Britain's partners in the Marshall Plan have been quick to pin upon their neighbor sole responsibility for the refusal of Europe's trading deficit to shrink. It is British bilateralism, British nonconvertibility, the overvaluation of British sterling that has brought Europe to its present plight, and these policies in their turn—here the criticisms are taken up with even greater emphasis in the United States—spring not from any economic necessity but from a blind doctrinaire preference for socialism, planning and control.

They say (the American critics in particular) that Britain's woes have a simple origin in the Socialist doctrines of the Labor government—which is untrue. They say (the European critics in particular) that the British people are making less effort to get out of their troubles than the other peoples of western Europe—which is not only untrue, but unfair and grossly insulting.

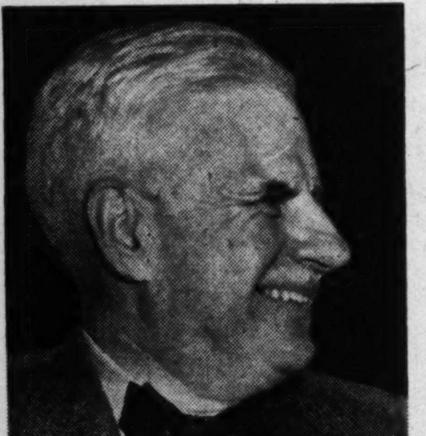
Facts Govern Policies

ONE DIFFICULTY in countering the anti-Socialist type of criticism lies in finding exactly what the critics have in mind. Some mean socialism in the narrow sense of particular Socialist policies practiced by the Labor government. For instance, Senator Kem and those who join with him mean that Britain's balance of payments difficulties—or, more accurately perhaps, Britain's slowness in emerging from them—are due in large part to the specifically Socialist measures that the present government has taken and that a non-Socialist government would not have taken. This is not true.

The most clearly "Socialist" of the Labor government's measures are the nationalization schemes, and whatever they may do to the national economy in the long run, they have certainly not yet had time to exert any effect on the ratio between imports and exports.

The doctrinaire socialism of the present government is also sometimes said to show itself in the trade policies pursued in Britain, the careful control of commodities by licensing, the bilateralism dominating all commercial exchanges save those in the sterling area. These policies are certainly unpleasant; but they are not the avoidable aberrations of doctrinaire Socialists. British commercial policies, with a few exceptions, are imposed by the facts of the case.

Perhaps the best proof of that is to point out that when the United States Government comes up against comparable problems, as in Germany and Austria, it reacts in much the same way. The Joint Export-Import Agency—which is virtually western Germany's Board of Trade—has been under predominantly American influence for the last 2½ years. No agency has pursued a more rigorous bilateralism. The various "offset agreements" which regulated German trade have proved to be as near barter deals as any made since Dr. Schacht, and American policy in relation to "nonessential imports" has made Mr. Harold Wilson look an apostle of liberalism.



SENATOR JAMES KEM (R., MO.)
. . . Critic of British socialism

Poorly Timed Strides

IT MAY BE, however, that when they speak of "socialism," the critics have in mind, more vaguely, the policies of the welfare state. If so, their criticisms have much more substance. Not that there is anything wrong in principle with the welfare state. It is a universal and praiseworthy humanitarian ambition to protect individual human beings against suffering caused by economic misfortunes. Every modern state is a welfare state; as Mr. Bevin said the other day, there are few clearer examples than the way American legislation has protected the farmers of the United States against the rigors of the economic climate.

What can justly be held against the British welfare state is only that it has chosen the wrong time to take such long strides forward. Every manifestation of the welfare state—both by the benefits it confers and by the taxation it levies to pay for them—necessarily weakens the link between a man's own output and the material reward he receives and therefore has repercussions on the efficiency of the national economy. What can be alleged against the British welfare state is that it has ignored these repercussions just at a time when the situation of the country required that more attention than usual should be paid to them.

If this is the criticism, then it is justified. But this is not "socialism"—not, at least, in any sense in which "socialism" is a controversial term.

After all, there is nothing in what is needed that would be impossible for a far-sighted and realist Labor Party to swallow. But if the attempt is made to put all the blame on one party to the exclusion of others—which is not true—and to find the remedy in a complete abandonment and reversal of everything that it has ever stood for—which is not necessary—then the only result will be to solidify in resentful opposition what is bound, at the lowest, to be a large minority of the British people.

U. N. Figures Are Plain

THE SECOND fashionable line of criticism suffers from as much loose use of words as the first. This is the criticism which is being heard with such emphasis in the Organization for European Economic Cooperation in Paris and taken up with such enthusiasm in Belgium, Italy and France. Britain, so the line of argument runs, has by its low production, its rigid controls, its bilateralism and its overvalued sterling ruined the expansion of either European or world trade and is thus primarily responsible for the fact that the Marshall countries cannot cover their dollar deficits and that the shadow of the dollar shortage lies darkly across all hopes of further European recovery. The best answer to this is to quote the facts, as set out, for example, in the Economic Bulletin for Europe, published by the United Nations' Economic Commission for Europe. The figures of industrial production in the chief Marshall Plan countries are as follows:

1—Indices of Industrial Production
First Quarter of 1949, as Percentage of 1938

Belgium	122	Netherlands	122
Denmark	135	Norway	130
France	134	Sweden	147
Italy	90	United Kingdom	131

There is nothing here of which Britain need be ashamed. But total industrial production, though it is a fair measure of aggregate "effort," is only indirectly relevant to the major problem of postwar Europe, which is the balance of payments. The best way of testing what has been done to overcome that is to set out the figures of exports and of imports by volume. That country might perhaps be thought to have done most to master its problems which had most sharply reduced imports and most sharply increased exports. The third column of the following table therefore shows the ratio of exports to imports:

2—Exports and Imports by Volume
First Quarter of 1949

	Exports	Imports	Export Index divided by Import Index
Belgium-Luxbg.	114	97	118
Denmark	84	107	79
France	127	106	118
Norway	91	109	84
Sweden	65	103	63
Switzerland	113	121	94
United Kingdom	156	82	190

Does this look like slacking? Or perhaps an even closer test is to show what percentage of its dollar requirements each country is earning by its own exports to dollar markets. Not every country, of course, should be expected to cover the whole, or even the same proportion, of its dollar requirements. Buch each country might reasonably be expected to show some improvement in the ratio since the prewar position; the last column of the following table is therefore the most significant:

3—Imports from and Exports to the Dollar Area

	Trade with Canada and USA, April, 1948-March, 1949 Imp. $ Mil's.	Exp. $ Mil's	Proportion of $ Imports Covered by $ Exports '48-'49 %	'38 %	Change from 1938 to '48-'49
Belgium-Luxbg.	355	138	39	55	—16
Denmark	125	15	12	18	— 6
France	594	82	14	39	—25
Italy	595	95	16	73	—57
Netherlands	355	39	11	42	—31
Norway	120	35	29	46	—17
Sweden	160	74	46	64	—18
Switzerland	231	114	49	80	—31
United Kingdom	1,565	559	36	27	+ 9

There could hardly be a more triumphant statistical vindication of the commercial efforts that Britain has been making. So far from "dragging its feet," Britain is the only one of the Marshall countries that is earning a higher proportion of its dollar requirements than before the war. Nor has the relative position changed significantly since March; the fall in European exports to the dollar area has been as universal as it has been severe. The pound sterling may, indeed, be over-valued, and British prices may be too high; but it is very difficult, in the light of these figures, to believe that other European countries are any less at fault in this respect.

.Why, then, does the British crisis appear to be so much more severe than that of other countries? Part of the reason is simply that it is more fully discussed. The practice of economic analysis and criticism has been carried much further in Britain than in other European countries, and if anything is wrong here, it emerges very quickly into a very bright light of publicity.

Another part of the reason is to be found in the fact that Britain is far more dependent on international trade than most other nations, and any sickness in international commerce therefore has a more immediate and profound effect here than elsewhere. Again, Britain is affected by the fact that it is banker to the whole sterling area, a function whose value is beginning to be appreciated even in Washington.

And finally, since frank speaking is the order of the day, it may be mentioned that Britain for six years spent its financial and commercial assets in the common cause.. Other European nations, though they suffer in other ways, were able through neutrality or occupation to preserve their assets.

The change in the relationship between the old industrial nations of Europe and the new industrial giant in the New World has been on the way for the last 30 years. The wars have accentuated but not caused the trend. It has been masked since the end of the conflict in part by American generosity, in part by the world's desire to buy anything it could at whatever price. Now, in 1949, the underlying maladjustment between Europe and America is emerging like a reef hidden for a time under a spring tide.

To choose this moment to pin all blame for a vast shift in the world's economic surface to the actions of one power not only shows a quite distorted sense of proportion. It makes virtually certain that none of the right solutions will be applied. There is a month to go before Sir Stafford Cripps and Mr. Bevin pay their fateful visit to Washington. It is to be hoped that in the interval calmer tempers and saner judgments will prevail.

The Gallup Poll

Only 3% of Voters Disapprove of FBI

By George Gallup
Director, American Institute of Public Opinion

J. EDGAR HOOVER'S Federal Bureau of Investigation gets a big vote of confidence from the public in a Nation-wide survey of opinion.

Recently the FBI has been the target of charges from a number of left-wing and liberal sources as the "American Gestapo." These criticisms do not seem to have had much effect on the attitude of the public as a whole toward the bureau.

Only a small proportion of persons polled—3 per cent—express disapproving or derogatory opinions about the FBI.

The study of public attitudes covered a number of aspects. All voters polled were asked, first:

"Will you tell me what the initials 'FBI' stand for?"

A total of 78 per cent gave accurate or reasonably accurate answers, while 16 per cent said they did not recognize those initials and 6 per cent gave vague answers. Some would undoubtedly recognize the term "G-man," while not knowing the exact meaning of the FBI initials.

All who identified the FBI initials correctly were asked:

"What is your opinion of the FBI?"

Very high, excellent, it does wonderful job	32%
Good, approve it	41
Mild disapproval	2
Derogatory	1
No opinion	2
	78
Not familiar with initials "FBI"	22
	100%

Last year President Truman gave the FBI one of its most difficult assignments to date—checking on the loyalty of 2,500,000 Federal employes. Charges of "snooping" and of acting as "thought police" have grown out of this assignment.

To carry out this task as well as to enforce more than 120 major Federal laws, the FBI has only 4100 agents, or one for every 37,000 persons in the country. A great deal of the information in FBI files is sent in by the public in the form of "tips," rather than being dug up by FBI agents themselves.

If it comes to a question of enlarging the FBI to carry on the investigation of Communist groups, the bureau would have little difficulty enlisting public support.

In the final question in today's survey, voters were asked:

"Would you like to see the Government increase the amount of money given to the FBI so that it could add more agents to check on the Communists—or do you think there are enough FBI agents now?"

The vote:

Increase money	46%
Large enough	15
No opinion	17
	78%

Youth Favored In Night Driving

New York (AP).—The glare of oncoming automobile headlights at night is more dangerous for drivers over 30 than for those younger.

Glare-resistance is best from the age of 20 to 29, says the Better Vision Institute. Even then, one person in seven is below average. From 30 to 39 years, one person in three is below average.

Benighted Rule

Three news items appearing in The Washington Post on Saturday throw into sharp focus the benighted attitude that still prevails among many Congressmen toward the Nation's Capital. The first reported that the House District Committee by a vote of 15 to 8 bottled up the District home-rule bill, at least for the present session. The second dealt with the flat rejection by the House of its Appropriation Committee's request for three million dollars to finance Washington's sesquicentennial celebration next year. The third was an estimate by the Census Bureau to the effect that Greater Washington now has a population of 1,402,000, with 863,000 of them living in the District itself. In population and in importance to the Nation, Washington has become a great metropolis, but in the House it is often dealt with as if it were still a country village.

Of course, the vote on home rule cannot be considered final. It reflects, in addition to the reactionary distrust of any concession to democracy in the District, an eagerness on the part of some members to adjourn the present session as soon as possible. When Congress returns next January it will be confronted by a petition to discharge the House District Committee from further consideration of the bill. Presumably the full support of the President and the House leaders as well as many Republicans will be thrown behind this drive. The poll on home rule conducted by this newspaper suggests that there should be no difficulty in getting the necessary 218 signatures on the petition or in passing the bill once it is laid before the House.

The outlook for the proposed Freedom Fair to celebrate the 150th anniversary of the establishment of the Capital in Washington is much less hopeful. The previous Congress voted $15,000 to plan the celebration, and a vast amount of effort has gone into the advance preparations. The Senate voted two million dollars to underwrite the project, but the House appears to have upset everything that had been done by cutting off all funds in the name of economy. If this is economy, it is a queer sort, especially in view of the fact that most of the fund would doubtless have come back to the Government. It is questionable whether the damage done can be repaired, for it is already late to undertake construction of buildings for a celebration next spring. Indeed, it is so late that Carter T. Barron, executive vice chairman of the Sesquicentennial Commission, has given up hope of securing any congressional aid for the project.

The most disturbing fact is that Congress clings to its unwelcome task of governing the District and at the same time fails miserably to meet its responsibilities. That kind of government may have been tolerable when Washington was a sleepy boarding-house town for legislators spending a few months out of each year here. But it becomes increasingly intolerable in the large metropolis that the District has become.

Costly Trustee

Senator Bridges has defended his acceptance of a $35,000 salary as trustee of the United Mine Workers Pension Fund by explaining that he spent a "substantial" part of it for private advice. Now it is disclosed that the fund itself paid out $12,000 for private actuarial advice rendered Senator Bridges, in addition to his salary. A further unsavory bit of news extracted from the minutes of the trustees' meetings and made public by Senator Taylor was that Joseph M. Friedman, an employe of the Department of Justice who aided in prosecution of the injunction case against the UMW, was paid a $15,000 fee for legal services rendered to a former UMW Fund trustee.

Mr. Bridges says, however, that the general counsel and actuarial services paid for by the fund were not sufficient for his purposes. He considered it necessary to pay personally for the services of certified accountants, attorneys and other more general counsel. It would be interesting to know how much of his salary remained after he had engaged this array of talent to assist him. In any case, the fund has paid high for the services of a trustee who, by his own admission, is incapable of discharging the duties of his office without the costly assistance of a bevy of experts.

Both Senator Bridges and Joseph Friedman have accepted pay for services that might conflict with their duties. Their conduct is inexcusable, and we welcome publication of the facts in the hope that it will hasten the resignation of the Senator and impress Government officials with the impropriety—to use no harsher term—of taking pay from private groups that may be affected by their official actions.

Marxist Semantics

One of the great difficulties in dealing with the problem of communism is the matter of language. The English-speaking comrades use the same words, by and large, as we do, but attach utterly different and sometimes opposite meanings to them. And this, of course, is what makes argument futile.

This semantic confusion has greatly complicated the trial of the 11 Communist leaders in the Federal Court in New York which has been in progress for seven months and gives no indication of approaching an end. The defendants, as you know, are accused of having taught and advocated the overthrow of this Republic by force and violence. The Government has sought to support this charge by citations from the speeches and writings of the defendants and by quotations from the Marxist-Leninist scriptures.

Take, for example, the testimony of Comrade Howard Johnson, a Negro, who is the party's educational director for the State of New York and therefore, presumably, an expert Marxist exegete. Mr. Johnson has insisted that the word "revolution" does not necessarily mean a violent and radical alteration of the political and social system. It may mean nothing more than a state of affairs in which "the majority of the working people no longer want to tolerate things as they are, and would take some steps to change from the rule of one class to the rule of another class." All this sounds very peaceable and orderly, much like getting rid of the Democrats and putting in the Republicans, or vice versa. However, on cross-examination, Mr. Johnson admitted that the revolution might under some circumstances be less peaceful than he had indicated.

A similar confusion applies to the term "imperialist wars," which, according to Communist doctrine, must be turned, if possible, into civil wars. Mr. Johnson says that the American imperialists are now seeking to start a third world war with Soviet Russia, but it does not follow that they will succeed in doing so. Thus the question of civil war is irrelevant to present conditions.

Again, an imperialist war may cease overnight to be an imperialist war. Thus, according to the testimony of Comrade Robert Thompson, chairman of the party in New York State and one of the 11 defendants, the character of the recent World War changed "basically" when Hitler attacked the Soviet Union. Until then the party had naturally desired "the defeat of the pro-Fascist ruling circles in England and France and of big business circles here in the United States." Accordingly, it sought to dissuade the United States from going to the assistance of the French and British imperialists. But after the attack on Russia, the party line was naturally directed toward "bringing the assistance of the United States to the support of the Soviet and British people."

Elsewhere in his testimony Mr. Thompson explained that if a popular front coalition ever got control of things in this country it would certainly be opposed by the big business interests. Therefore big business would be in revolt against the duly constituted authorities, and seeking to overthrow them by force and violence, "as was the case for example in Spain with the Franco rebellion there."

Of course, if the Fascists get control of the country first that will be another matter. Then, said Comrade Thompson, "our party, along with millions of other anti-Fascists in the country, would unquestionably have to adapt our policies accordingly." He believes, however, that "fascism can be stopped in this country," and the "avenue of democratic mass action left open."

Now to non-Communists, not too well acquainted with the subtleties of Marxist reasoning, the testimony of Comrades Johnson and Thompson may seem to boil down to this: that the Communists will not overthrow the Government of this country by force and violence, if they find it more convenient to obtain power by other means. To the faithful, however, it seems to mean that the Communists have no intention of opposing force and violence to any but an outright Fascist government. But since any government or order of society that the Communists find necessary or expedient to oppose is by their definition Fascist, perhaps it comes to the same thing after all.

Licensed Murder

The man whose car hit and fatally injured Margaret Mitchell in Atlanta was a taxi driver, off duty at the time and driving his own car. He was drunk, speeding, and driving on the wrong side of the road, according to the charges brought against him. He also had 23 previous traffic violations scored against him on police records. This particularly shocking example of murder on the highway has spurred Governor Talmadge to promise a tightening of procedures covering licenses for cab drivers in that State. It ought to bring far wider results in many other States than Georgia.

More than once President Truman has related to meetings of the President's Highway Safety Conference the fantastic situation in his own State. There a man released from an insane asylum can walk into any drug store and for 25 cents purchase a license authorizing him to drive a motor vehicle on the highways of Missouri. This license is just as valid—or worthless—in any other State the man may venture into.

Missouri happens to be one of the remaining States where the issuance of driver's licenses is looked upon as a method of raising revenue rather than of lowering the accident rate. But driver's license requirements vary among the States. At one extreme, South Dakota requires no license at all. On the other hand, 24 States and the District of Columbia have adopted the terms of the Uniform Vehicle Code in this respect.

There are some 30 million motor vehicles operating in the United States, and they travel from city to city and State to State with full freedom. Obviously the task of improving the highway accident record is obstructed so long as laws and regulations covering the operation of vehicles are different or even contradictory in the various jurisdictions. There must be uniformity in the three Es of traffic safety—engineering, enforcement, and education—as a cornerstone of progress. But this uniformity is a task for community and State action; it is not a Federal function.

Driver's licensing is only one of the factors involved. Uniform rules of the road, uniform requirements of equipment and mechanical inspection, of registration and title certification, of civil liability and financial responsibility are others. But driver's licensing is an important factor, and Miss Mitchell's shocking murder—the weapon a ton of steel—ought to stimulate a full-steam drive to make licensing of drivers both uniform and meaningful throughout the Nation.

Churchill's Lead

On a couple of occasions in the discussions at Strasbourg the finger has been put unerringly on a central issue by that redoubtable warhorse turned John the Baptist, Winston Churchill. First was his plea for the prompt admittance of Germany to the Council of Europe. Over four years have gone by since the end of hostilities, and Germany is still without a title to membership in the European community. After the last war it took the Europeans seven years to admit Germany to the League of Nations. By that time she had a sort of pariah complex expressed in intrigue and preparedness for revenge. Judging from the kind of electioneering in the recent election, it almost seemed as if this stage had already been reached again, but the prospect this time is lessened by Russian conduct, especially by the retention of so many German prisoners in Russia. However, the Russians cannot be counted upon to offset European procrastination, and the new Christian Democrat government needs the kind of sustenance that membership in the Council of Europe would confer. There is an opportunity to do something in what Mr. Churchill calls the "precious" now before the opportunity is "lost forever."

Mr. Churchill's second excursion lay in his description of the real enemy of the free world as tyranny. Tyranny is, indeed, the real danger to the perpetuation of free institutions, the totalitarianism of the Right as well as of the Left; but Mr. Churchill seems to be the only public man left who has retained the power of identification. "Tyranny is always the same, whatever slogans it offers, whatever name it calls itself, whatever liveries it wears." The tendency of our times is to think and act as if the enemies of our enemies are ipso facto our friends—that there is nothing wrong with fascism so long as it is anticommunism, and we should work with it. That has been one of the costliest mistakes of this generation. In our anticommunism some of us embraced fascism; others, nazism; and when hostilities broke out, we all embraced communism as a war partner. There was some excuse for this latter manifestation when we were fighting for our lives, but there is no excuse nowadays. If we do, we run the risk of losing our integrity, and imperiling our moral leadership in this troubled world.

Let us then take a leaf out of the copybook about liberty to which in speech after speech Mr. Churchill is richly contributing as he seeks to convert Europe into a community. What Mr. Churchill doesn't like is "totalitarian tyranny." It is what Americans don't like, either. This doesn't mean that, quixotically, we must take up arms against any form of totalitarianism, but it does mean that we cannot feel toward totalitarians as we do toward practitioners of freedom. To freemen belong the future, to freemen banded together in union. Freedom and union are words which make for the strength of soul as well as for the strength of body against which nothing can prevail.

Pigeonholed Science

The country cannot afford another year of delay in the establishment of a National Science Foundation. Beginning with the war, the Nation's reservoir of basic science has been badly depleted. Much attention has been given to applied science, but little to the pure research which is the fuel of all other scientific work. The purpose of a National Science Foundation would be to survey scientific deficiencies and, through grants and fellowships, to concentrate research where it is needed. An incidental benefit would be to take the heat off the Atomic Energy Commission by relieving the AEC of the sponsorship of a fellowship program in basic science.

Each effort since 1945 to enact the science foundation into law has been defeated, either because of administratively unworkable features in the bill or because of the failure of one house of Congress to act. There is still time during this session to remedy the lack. The Thomas bill, not brilliant but acceptable, has passed the Senate; however, the companion Priest measure in the House has been stuck in the Rules Committee since mid-June. Mr. Priest ought to exert every influence to see that his bill comes to a vote, for a functioning science foundation is a national defense need no less important than armaments.

"Good Conduct Abroad"

In connection with your August 13 editorial, "Good Conduct Abroad," I am wondering if you know of what one American Air Force man did in England during the war to promote good Anglo-American relations. Your readers will be particularly interested, for he was formerly a frequent contributor to your Postlude column—John T. Appleby.

Appleby was assigned to war duty in Bury St. Edmunds, and so thoroughly enjoyed his year in England that, just before he sailed for home, he wrote a letter to the London Times, thanking the British people for their hospitality. Not only was his letter published in the Times—a lifetime ambition of many people in the British Empire—but it was also read aloud the next day on the floor of the House of Commons.

On his way home to his home in Arkansas, Appleby stopped over to visit me here in Arlington. Almost immediately there started coming a stream of letters from England, forwarded by the Times, and written by all sorts of people, from dukes on down, expressing their appreciation of what at least one member of the American armed forces had felt about their country. Most of them extended invitations for visits if ever he came again to England.

Nor was this all. For Appleby was by this time well along with the writing of a book about his experiences in England. When Suffolk Summer was published in England it was well received, running to several editions.

Nor is even this the end of the story. For Appleby turned over the proceeds of his book to beloved Bury St. Edmunds for the creation of a memorial garden in the Abbey grounds. The mayor has recently sent him a photograph of the "Suffolk Summer" garden, showing its beds of roses, with flagstone paths between, bordered with rosemary and alyssum, and with a small fountain in the center.

Here, surely, is a notable example of that "Good Conduct Abroad" which you have so laudably advocated.

Sectarian Schools

A letter in your issue of August 15 calls to the attention of Protestants and other Americans United for Separation of Church and State (POAU), and of Bishop G. Bromley Oxnam, a vice president of the organization, an editorial from the Raleigh (N. C.) News and Observer, which states that ". . . a private school for Methodist orphans is operated at the Methodist orphanage here as a part of and at the expense of the Raleigh city school system which draws its funds from State and local taxes . . ."

If Mr. Morrissy, the writer of the letter, were acquainted with the record of POAU, he would know that the organization has been entirely clear and consistent on this point. For his benefit I wish to reiterate the position to which POAU has from the beginning adhered, and will always adhere:

POAU unqualifiedly condemns the use of public tax funds for the support of sectarian schools of any denomination. Many complaints of alleged violations of this principle by various denominations come into POAU's office from all parts of the country, and, with its limited resources, the organization endeavors to obtain the facts in each situation. Whenever a violation is proved, POAU makes its opposition to the abuse known.

If investigation proves that Mr. Morrissy's allegation concerning the Raleigh situation is correct, POAU will oppose public aid to the Methodist school involved as heartily as it opposes public aid to parochial schools of any kind.

CHARL ORMOND WILLIAMS,
Member executive committee, Protestants and other Americans United for Separation of Church and State.

Skin Whitener

I shouldn't turn white even if it were possible. I have just read the article in your issue of August 16 about the use of monobenzylathen of hydroquinone to whiten black skin. My skin isn't black, it's brown, and I like it just as it is. I don't want to turn white.

Suppose trees were white instead of green, skies white instead of blue, violets white instead of purple? God saw the beauty of color and put it on the earth for man to enjoy. That is why Chinese are yellow, Mexicans tan, Indians red, Africans black, and Europeans white.

But why not try to improve this preparation and use it for removing scars and other surgical uses.

Transit Exploitation

In his August 17 letter on "Transit Exploitation," Mr. George H. English offers the real clew to the why of radios in public conveyances, which is private gain for the transit company at the expense of the riding public.

Letters to all the authorities who might logically be considered to be responsible for allowing the installation of these radios and ought at least to be interested in the matter, have netted me exactly nothing, except the information that a hearing is to be held, on an unnamed and still nebulous date.

A letter recently written to the PUC questioning the extension of radio programs in public vehicles into the late hours of the evening, several hours after the announced 7 p. m. closing time, elicited the very enlightening information that the matter of the hours was one which was entirely between the broadcasting company and the Capital Transit Co.

In other words, the contract between the Capital Transit Co. and the broadcasting company was consummated without any reference to local authority, without the necessity of even obtaining permission from such authority or the raising of any legal question, and without consultation with the public in any way.

Nathan's Report On Steel Wages

Mr. Robert R. Nathan in your issue of August 9 attempts to answer my criticism of his report to the CIO justifying a fourth round of wage increases for the United Steel Workers.

He makes a public-spirited gesture that "price decreases are preferable to wage increases." But he finally recommends that "wage adjustments will increase buying power and consumption."

Statistics refute Mr. Nathan's premises and conclusions. Steel prices are not high in relation to other metals and to the wholesale price index. The price of finished steel was invariably substantially reduced in the past after wages and raw material prices had stabilized. But now steel's raw material costs have been declining only recently and wage increases have been threatened.

To prove the contrary, Mr. Nathan shows that between 1937 and 1938 "steel prices declined little more than 2 per cent." Steel wage rates were raised in 1937 by 19 per cent for 10 cents an hour, from 52½ cents to 62¼ cents).

Mr. Nathan evades the question concerning wages and profits. He compares 1939 to 1948. Are these years comparable? Dividends of U. S. Steel common were zero in 1939. Its operating rate was 61 per cent in 1939, a semidepression year, but 94 per cent in 1948, a prosperous year. Mr. Nathan concludes that employment costs (wages plus social insurance, etc.) rose 2.70 times and net income 3.14 times. He might have added that the dividend increase from 0 to $4 was infinity. The choice of a base makes a profound difference. In 1939, U. S. Steel profits had fallen to 39 per cent of the 1937 level.

Comparing 1937 and 1948, when steel operating rates were 72 per cent vs. 94 per cent, the increases were 2.31 times in employment costs and only 1.37 times in income. Comparing two years when operating rates were identical, at 72 per cent capacity, as in 1937 and 1946, employment costs rose 2.02 times but net income fell to 0.94.

Comparing even depressed 1939 and prosperous 1948, wages per ton rose from $22 to $44 or 2.0 times, whereas profits per ton rose only 1.62 times, from $2.34 to $3.80 compared with $4.60 in 1937 and $5.10 in 1926.

The percentage of profits to wages in depressed 1939 was 10.6 per cent and in prosperous 1948 was 13.3 per cent, compared with 20 per cent and more in normal years like 1937, 1926 and 1923. If Mr. Nathan had selected the panic years, 1938 or 1932, as a base, he could have "proved" that wages should currently be raised to fantastic levels.

To shift from the doctrine of lower prices for all to higher wages for his clients, Mr. Nathan resorts to a flip-flop behind a cloud of economic fog. First Mr. Nathan indulges in cliches, denied nowhere. "Depression will harm all people."

Next Mr. Nathan calls names. He talks about "ultraconservatives," "ancient and irrelevant," etc. Nathan thus dodges basic issues.

Finally, he oversimplifies theories of the business cycle, of which the late Prof. Wesley C. Mitchell listed over a score in his several classic volumes on this subject. Most of the theories of cycles would refute Mr. Nathan's conclusions, as disequilibrium between steel wages and fixed incomes, or as threat of business deficits. Yet out of this number, he selects one that serves his purpose, the purchasing power theory.

Thereupon he promises that if only his clients' wages are raised, the country will prosper. But he threatens that if steel wages are not raised a dark future confronts us. How will raising the wages in the two remaining "high-profit" industries, steel and automobiles, increase the purchasing power of workers in the 18 other industries listed in the National City Bank Letter for August whose net incomes for the first half of 1949 fell below the second half of 1948?

It is interesting to note that in the business cycle of 1932-37, the steel wage increase of 10 cents an hour went into effect on March 10, 1937, exactly when the market hit its five-year peak, from which it subsequently declined 50 per cent. In its wage policy, the CIO acted just like "suckers" who buy at the very top under mob mania and prove 100 per cent wrong. The CIO wage movements might prove ideal market forecasters, in reverse. A wage increase now would accelerate the recession.

Will Mr. Murray withdraw his wage demands now if the industry cuts prices? Here is a test of the honesty of the Murray-Nathan alternatives of lower prices or higher wages. It is the touchstone of the sincerity of Philip Murray's interest in the "national welfare." Let him speak!

Arresting Deflation

By Mark Sullivan

More Inflation Ahead?

THE FEDERAL RESERVE BOARD has, as one of its main functions, authority over the amount of credit in the country, power to increase it or reduce it. Since last March the board has taken five steps to increase credit, to bring about what is called "easy money." It has twice increased the amount banks are permitted to lend. It has twice increased the amount of credit that may be used in selling goods on the installment plan. It has increased the amount of credit that may be used by buyers of stocks on the exchanges.

The theory behind these steps is that more credit will cause business to take on greater activity and volume. The purpose is to check the present recession in business, and this motive has justification. The present condition is a mild deflation. What is aimed at is to change the direction, to create some degree of inflation intended without doubt to be mild and to be held in check.

The board's steps, in the aggregate, have not so far had material effect. The increases in the amounts banks may lend have not been taken advantage of by borrowers. With only a slight seasonal interruption, borrowings from banks have been diminishing.

It is the borrowers who really determine. The Federal Reserve Board can only increase the quantity of credit available, which does not become actual until borrowers make use of it. A highly important factor in credit is psychology, and apparently the psychology of borrowers, in business and industry, leads them to refrain from making use of more credit at this time.

It is a question whether, in the long run, the restraint of borrowers may not better serve the public interest than the creation of more credit. There is a parallel in the 1920s. In 1923-4 there was a mild recession, comparable to the present one. To reverse it the Federal Reserve Board of that day took steps to create more credit, chiefly by making interest rates lower. The steps were effective, the quantity of credit increased, business expanded.

BY HINDSIGHT we can see that the Federal Reserve Board of 1924 ought to have reduced the amount of credit as soon as business expanded. But it did not. For a purpose that seemed laudable at the time, to promote economic recovery in Europe, the board continued the policy of increasing credit. In the United States, the increase led to boom, especially on the stock exchange, and boom to the collapse of 1929. It is not necessary to infer too much from this parallel. We can hope that the present board, if its recent steps to increase credit becomes effective, would at a proper time take steps to check the increase.

Many steps being taken in Washington for the purpose of checking the present mild deflation necessarily mean a reversal of direction, hence one degree or another of inflation. Reversed deflation is resumed inflation. The amount of inflation contemplated is mild; no one consciously intends inflation of a degree that would be dangerous. But the steps being taken are of a kind that are difficult to check, once the effect of them gets in motion.

SOME OF the steps consist of new or increased Government expenditures, resulting in increase of the Government's debt, which is a primary cause of inflation. Some of these Government expenditures are of a kind that automatically increase in future years, such as benefits for veterans and for old age and the like, which increase as ages increase. Such expenditures and other forces mean, under existing conditions, increase of the Government's debt not only this year, but next year, the year following and perhaps future years. Increase in the Government's debt, if continued indefinitely, would with mathematical certainty result in inflation of a calamitous degree.

Outside Washington, a force making for resumed inflation, such as went on during the past four years, is the demands by labor unions and leaders for a fourth round of increased wage rates. This is especially true of the demand in steel as a basic industry.

A wage increase in steel in February, 1946, accompanied by a $5-a-ton increase in the price of steel, was the most dynamic cause of the inflation that went on during and following 1946. The price of steel enters into the prices of everything made of steel. For this reason, and a psychological one, an increase in steel wages and prices is "pattern-making" for all industry.

When the chairman of the American Management Association, Mr. John M. Hancock, testified before the presidential fact-finding board in the steel dispute, he put it bluntly and accurately: "The issue facing the country and this board is, does America want more inflation?"

The Washington Merry-Go-Round

Adjourn Next May, New Proposal

During Drew Pearson's vacation, his column is being written by his old friend, Robert S. Allen.

By Robert S. Allen

ONE top Democratic leader of Congress has a new idea on the embattled question of adjournment. It is not to adjourn at all, but continue working right through the year in order to dispose of all unfinished legislation and the new budget by next May, at the latest.

He makes two arguments for his idea: (1) That this year is already so far gone that work will soon have to be started on the new budget; (2) that with 1950 an election year, it will be to the advantage of all members to wind up by next spring. That would enable them to concentrate all their time and attention on campaigning.

The leader has discussed the idea with President Truman. He raised no objection.

"There is a lot in what you say," the President remarked. "Certainly, there is plenty of work that Congress still has to finish. I'll stay as long as Congress will, and no complaints."

Note—Senator Robert Taft, facing a tough reelection fight, suspects the Democrats of purposely prolonging Congress in order to thwart his campaign plans. He charges they did that the last time he ran in 1944. If Congress adjourns, Taft will make an extensive speaking tour in Ohio this fall.

Russia Takes Time

LATEST Soviet reparations demand on eastern Germany is a large quantity of wrist watches. The Ministry of Economic Affairs of Saxony has been ordered to deliver 5500 new wrist watches by October 1.

Russian appetite for wrist watches is insatiable. In the early days after the war, when friendly relations still prevailed between Allied and Red army men, the former quickly learned to keep their wrist watches out of sight when with Russians. They invariably insisted on "swapping."

Freezer Cold-Shouldered

ONE former member of the Truman Cabinet is viewing the furor over the gift freezers with equanimity. He is Senator Clinton Anderson (D., N. Mex.).

One day, while Anderson was Secretary of Agriculture, a refrigerator was delivered to his home. Mrs. Anderson telephoned the good news.

"What refrigerator?" asked Anderson.

"The one that is being unloaded from a truck right now."

"I'm sorry to disappoint you," Anderson replied. "but I did not order that refrigerator. You ask the trucker who sent it."

A few minutes later, Mrs. Anderson phoned back with the name of the donor.

"Tell the trucker to take it back where it came from," Anderson directed. "If we need a refrigerator, we'll get one, but not as a gift from anyone. We'll pay for the refrigerator ourselves."

Basing Point Veto?

BASING POINT price system opponents are claiming President Truman will veto the legislation passed by Congress last week. It is now in conference to iron out differences between the House and Senate. Chief of these is an amendment by Representative John Carroll, militant Colorado New Dealer, to protect small businessmen.

Although it received little attention, the Senate debate on the issue was one of the most impressive of the session. Senator Paul Douglas (D., Ill.), former economics professor, assailed the legislation as monopolistic and designed to "repeal" a Supreme Court decision.

Peron's Luftwaffe

ARGENTINE'S President-Dictator Peron has added some new Nazi embellishments to his growing military force. The latest are seven crack German pilots, imported from western Germany. Several hundred former Luftwaffe veterans already are helping Peron build up his air force. Uruguay and Chile are uneasy over this Nazi infiltration.

Lobby Probe Chairman

REPRESENTATIVE FRANK BUCHANAN (D., Pa.) will chairman the House lobby investigation voted last week. The committee will consist of four Democrats and three Republicans. Speaker Sam Rayburn and Republican Floor Leader Joe Martin will announce the selection in a few days.

A stocky, quiet-mannered attorney, Buchanan has not been a limelight figure, but he is able and hard-working. His antipathy toward lobbyists is due to several disagreeable experiences with them.

Buchanan does not contemplate a "broadside" probe. His plan is to concentrate on a few major lobbies and explore them thoroughly as the basis for legislation next session to broaden and strengthen the Lobby Registration Act.

Slated for scrutiny are the real estate lobby, power lobby, medical lobby and the rivers and harbors lobby.

Lewis Steels Himself

LABOR insiders are offering to bet that John L. Lewis will make no agreement with the coal operators until the steelworkers' dispute is settled. It is claimed that Lewis is waiting for the outcome of that controversy before making his terms.

One high AFL official explained the situation this way:

"When times are good and the prospects favorable for the kind of wage contract he wants, Lewis likes to beat Phil Murray to the punch and bargain first. That way, he can claim credit for any gains the steelworkers get. But when times aren't so good and the prospects unfavorable for a pay raise, Lewis lets Murray carry the ball. Then, if things don't work out, Lewis puts the blame on Murray for setting the pattern."

Potpourri

THE Air Force is still continuing its investigation of black marketing charges against Maj. Gen. Clayton Bissell. He is spending considerable time traveling between Washington and Frankfurt, gathering information in his behalf . . . Former Representative Charle La Follette (R., Ind.) has been offered the job as the first civilian commissioner of Guam. He is now executive director of Americans for Democratic Action . . . Hawaiian Delegate Joe Farrington wants Republican National Chairman Guy Gabrielson to establish a "Territories branch" to promote party interests in those areas. Farrington has offered to make a contribution to set up this new division .

Mall Would Make a Fine Pigpen

By John W. Ball

Post Reporter

SEVERAL weeks ago when a breaking market caused the Agriculture Department to fear that it would have to support pork prices, Secretary Charles F. Brannan asked his aides for a plan.

One, cold pan, presented a progrom for buying live hogs and "running" them on the mall. They would "store," he declared, indefinitely inthat manner.

The possibility of having to support the hog market has Government officials in a dither. They can't buy live hogs. If they buy pork they can't put it on the market without breaking the price. To store it would be extremely expensive—cold storage is different from grain storage. It also is limited.

Pork can't be exported, unless we give it away. Even in cold storage it won't last more than a few months unless frozen. That is still more epxensive. They dare not destroy it—that always brings protests.

But Congress has ordered that the market be supported at 90 per cent of parity, and the House recently voted to continue such supports next year. Some predict the hog program will prove as expensive as the potato program when it wa charged the Govern- the hog program of the 1930s—and bring as much criticism as ment "plowed under the little pigs."

Rustic Airports

A NEW feature of the modern farm is an airplane landing strip. An Agriculture Department release recommends that farmers or groups of farmers provide grassed landing areas. The great increase in spraying and dusting of fields by airplane is the reason.

Arthur Gieser, chief pilot of grasshopper control in the Bureau of Entomology, says that such strips will pay for themselves in cheaper rates which pilots quote for their work when safe landing areas are nearby.

Congress has passed a law almost doubling the Government's experimental crop insurance program. The original program was cut back two years ago to experimental size, when a deficit of 73 million dollars was accumulated.

The present law was worked out by expert actuaries, directed and advised by Senator Clinton P. Anderson (D., N. Mex.), former Secretary of Agriculture and insurance company president.

A Crop of Taxes

TAXES on tobacco last year were almost twice as great as the cash the tobacco growers got for their crops.

Combined Federal and State taxes in the fiscal year 1949 (ending June 30) are estimated at 1720 million dollars by Dr. S. H. DeVault, agricultural economist at the University of Maryland. Cash receipts of farmers are estimated at 985 million. Federal taxes took 77 per cent, State taxes 23 per cent, DeVault says.

Works Both Ways

THE Agriculture Department is making studies to determine why retail prices of commodities do not decline when farm prices of those commodities go down. It has just finished the first of these studies—covering the farm-to-retail margins of wheat, white flour and bread.

Over a period of years, the report states, "the price farmers received for their wheat tended to move in the same direction as the retail prices of flour and bread.

"But, between January and October, 1948, the average local market prices of wheat dropped 30 per cent; the retail price of flour dropped 15 per cent; and the retail price of bread rose 0.7 per cent."

Helps in Hay Fever

By Alton L. Blakeslee

Associated Press Science Reporter

NEW YORK.—The shotguns of the hay fever season start firing soon, but there are some new drugs and ideas to aid the victims.

The shotguns are the pods of ragweed. They discharge their pollen in sudden slugs or bursts. A single pod may send out a million grains of pollen. The shooting starts in August and keeps on through September or October. During a season, it's estimated, the weeds broadcast one million tons of pollen.

The tiny pollen grains (2500 equal one inch) soar on the breeze and spread misery. Ragweed is the main bane of some seven million hay fever sufferers in the United States.

One counterattack opened with the use of the weed-killer 2, 4-D. Many cities and towns are spraying vacant lots and other favorite abodes of ragweed each June and July. The sprayings have killed off large areas of ragweed.

Public health engineers are tackling the problem, too, using engineering skills to set up defenses against the pollen barrages.

Your Own Backyard

WINDS carry the pollen for miles, but there's a suspicion that the plants right in your own neighborhood are often the main trouble-makers, says C. J. Velz, head of the civil engineering department, Manhattan College.

Pollen counts as high as 10 million grains to the cubic yard have been measured in the middle of ragweed patches. A count of 100 to the yard is generally thought to be enough to start most susceptible people sneezing.

But counting stations may be too far away from local patches of weeds to pick up the broadcast from them. Wind-borne pollens may thus sometimes be blamed for the suffering when the victims actually sniffed heavy loads from their own backyards, Velz told the Northeastern States Weed Control Conference.

Good, cheap instruments are needed to measure the instantaneous pollen count to learn what effects winds and local patches are having, he said. They must be located in carefully-chosen places.

The measurement method most used is to expose a sticky slide for 24 hours, and then count the grains that settled on it by gravity. But this doesn't show how many came at a certain hour, or how the wind affected the aerial cargo. Another method removes the pollen from a measured amount of air passing through an instrument, but this is expensive.

Topography plays tricks, too. Pollen-laden winds hitting a hill or mountain sweep upward, and may ride high over a valley. Localities far beyond the valley may get the pollen when the air currents come down again.

Long-Lasting Effect

MEANWHILE, chemists have produced more than a dozen new drugs that help relieve the distress of hay fever. Most of them combat histamine, a substance released in the body and believed to be a main cause of allergies. Some of the latest drugs give long-lasting protection.

No drug relieves every hay fever victim, and they often cause sleepiness, nausea, hives or other effects. A drug may work well for one person, but not another. The choice of drug, and the dose, should be directed by a doctor. Physicians also can give injections of pollen extracts to help build up resistance.

The mind and emotions often affect allergies, making the attacks worse, or perhaps even starting them. A picture of ragweed may start some people sneezing.

Since the psychic effect can be strong, some psychologists use hypnotism on hay fever victims. Hypnotism is suggestion, and giving the suggestion to relax helps remove emotional tension, the psychologists explain. People can be given the suggestion that they won't be bothered as much or at all by pollens or dust.

Some people have another answer to hay fever. They run away from ragweed areas. They find relief—unless some overlooked weed lets go with its charge of sneeze pellets.

THE National Registry of Rare Chemicals at the Illinois Institute of Technology knows where to get 13,500 rare chemicals. These are compounds which are priceless, not because they may be hard to make, but because they are not valuable enough to make. Only when someone needs one, does a rare chemical become valuable. Then, if he has to make it himself, the work may take months.

A few chemical companies and laboratories have set up the means to produce the 13,500. The registry gets them for scientists. They are always for pioneering experiments. Just a pinch is often all that is needed. The registry reports that the number of rare chemicals has increased 3000 in the past year.

A strange death signal appearing in rabbits' blood after they were exposed to X-rays is reported by Robert L. Rosenthal of the University of California.

The signal is a pearly white tint to the blood serum and plasma, he said in the magazine Science. It was most marked in animals that died a few days after being exposed to a single lethal dose of X-rays over their whole bodies. Animals showing less of it survived. The white tint came within 24 hours after the dose of X-rays and disappeared three days after exposure. What it is and how it is caused is being studied.

Rosenthal said it might prove helpful in early measurement of the effects of radiation on human beings and in studying the nature of radiation sickness.

Looking at the South

Cotton's Shaky Crown

By Hodding Carter

GREENVILLE, Miss.—This summer the Federal Government took title to 3,750,000 bales of cotton, which is about two-thirds of all the raw cotton in the Nation.

This Government cotton represents about one fourth of last year's crop, the largest in 11 years. It was acquired because cotton farmers, failing to get a better price from private purchasers, simply surrendered their cotton instead of repaying their price support loans.

With another large crop in the making, and an even bigger surplus in prospect, it is very unlikely that the cotton prices will rise and that the Government will be able to recover all of the 550 million dollars invested in this unsold raw cotton. That means the taxpayers will make up the difference.

Nor would the Government—meaning the taxpayers—keep the profit if the price of cotton which it holds were to rise. The profit would got to the farmer members of the pool.

This Governmental bulwark is a good thing for the cotton grower in immediate dollars and cents as long as it lasts. But some folks are beginning to figure that it can't last forever. Surpluses, even when they're paid for by the Government, can get so big that Congress may rebel at their continued creation and refuse to underwrite them.

This may sound far-fetched but it isn't. As politically potent as he is, the farmer is not the strongest political force in the United States. In 1900 the farm population was 41 per cent of the Nation's total. Today it is only 18 per cent. The industrial workers, the city dwellers far outnumber—and far outvote—the farmers.

Nor is cotton dominant among farm commodities. The cash return on cotton in 1948 was two and a half billion dollars. The cash income from meat animals was nearly ten billion. Dairy products brought four and a half billion dollars, food grains and poultry and eggs three billion each, and feed crops and vegetables nearly two billion. Corn, indirectly and directly, was second to meat, which puts cotton far down on the commodity list.

Worse, American cotton is in diminishing demand throughout the world and is staggering beneath the competitive attack of synthetics. In the past 20 years rayon has fallen 60 per cent in price. In the same period American cotton exports have shrunk 7 1-2 million to 3 1-2 million bales a year.

This is not an argument for abolition or even a drastic immediate reduction in cotton subsidies. A considerable part of the South—and the Southwest and Far West—would be thrown into bankruptcy in such event. But it is improbable that money will be thrown away indefinitely, even in the welfare state, to keep cotton farmers solvent and cotton prices artificially non-competitive. A readjustment is inevitable and it must be a four-way readjustment.

There must be further reduction in cotton acreage; the production costs must be reduced by at least one-half; the areas in which cotton can be planted must be restricted to those in which higher yields and lower cost will result in a more normal economy. Government support must be trimmed gradually, and be employed as an incentive to lowering production costs rather than as a guarantee that production methods are relatively inconsequential.

Matter of Fact

This Modern Graft is So Petty

By Joseph and Stewart Alsop

IN THE atmosphere of Washington today, one almost regrets the passing of the days when Big Sam Ward, king of the railroad lobbyists, fed his bought Senators on beaver tails stewed in champagne. For at least things were done in a big way then.

There is nothing big in what the 5-percenter investigation has been unearthing. There is only a kind of small nastiness. There has been no evidence of personal corruption. The motivation of almost everything that has been done has apparently been, not personal gain, but mere petty vanity. And it has all been on a niggling scale—the hole-in-corner wire-pulling, the commercialized "friendships," the little favors for little men.

Even where the evidence of real corruption exists, as in the General Accounting Office's investigation of war contract settlements, it has been on a scale so petty as to make Sam Ward blush for shame. To read the actual cases of fraud, which Comptroller General Lindsay Warren's investigators have unearthed and sent to the Justice Department for action, is a depressing experience. It is depressing to find that the service officers and Government officials who have sold themselves have been willing to sell themselves so cheap.

Chickenfeed Betrayals

SINCE charges have not yet been brought by the Justice Department, names cannot be named. But here is the sort of thing which, according to Warren and his staff, has been going on.

Shortly after a certain firm's representatives met two Government employes, it was awarded three handsome Government contracts. At the same time, liabilities to these Government officials were entered on the firm's books; a measly $2029 and a measlier $1175.

Another firm asked a Government official to increase its contract price. The increase was granted. The firm paid the Government official $500, a sum Sam Ward would not have stooped to offer a cloakroom attendant. Again, two Army officers on active duty were paid for "part-time services" by a firm with which they were dealing. Soon after the payment, the firm got a lush Government contract. The officers collected a mere $2000 in stock values for betraying their commission.

Such raw palm-greasing was exceptional, Warren's investigators found. They more frequently discovered a subtler form of recompense for services rendered. Repeatedly they found that officials or officers, who had been responsible during their Government service for awarding profitable contracts or exceedingly generous settlements, were subsequently employed at handsome salaries by the firms which had benefited. No doubt in many cases this was mere coincidence. But no doubt in many cases it was not.

Although almost all the cases of fraud involving Government officials or officers have been on a petty scale, the total sums involved are not petty. Warren has already announced that his investigators have discovered fraud costing the unhappy taxpayer more than $6,250,000. Moreover, Warren's experts are now combing over a case which may involve a fraud charge of nearly 20 million dollars against a single company. And it is not generally realized that the General Accounting office is only equipped to spot-check a small proportion of the total number of contracts and settlements involved. Thus it is likely that the whole loss to the taxpayer may run well into nine figures, no small sum even by today's standards.

Congressional Challenge

IT MAY be argued that the General Accounting Office has an ax to grind. On the theory that reconversion would never get under way if the usual ponderous GAO accounting methods were used, Congress relieved the GAO from direct supervision of settlements. Warren and his subordinates have bitterly resented this, charging that it was an open invitation to fraud and waste, and it is obviously in their interest to prove their point.

It may also be argued that in view of the millions of people and the billions of dollars involved, the Government is on the whole honestly run. Certainly there is nothing to compare with the lush corruption of the days when every important financial interest had its private army of bought lackeys in the Government.

Yet there are increasingly visible symptoms of a highly unpleasant disease. Such symptoms as have been uncovered by the 5-percenter inquiry, by Warren's investigation and by other probings do not indicate that the disease is as yet deeply serious. The symptoms are like the itching and scratching of the skin people get when they do not wash enough. Yet, as the Government and private business become constantly more involved with each other, the disease could easily go more than skin deep. It is this which justifies all the hullaballoo about what would certainly seem to Sam Ward a very niggling business.

'Borderless States'

Poles, Czechs Level Frontiers

By Edwin D. Gritz

Post Reporter

POLAND and Czechoslovakia are rapidly merging into a powerful socio-economic bloc under a series of new agreements which Washington observers declare remarkable if not unprecedented in world affairs.

Close followers of international relations go so far as to say that the Polish and Czech governments may well be preparing a working model for future "borderless" states with unrestricted economic relations and interchangeable social welfare benefits.

Also pointed out with equal emphasis, however, is the fact that the Polish-Czech programs are no doubt part of Soviet plans at this time for quick development of an "Eastern Ruhr" to bolster Russian economy while also providing a mighty military potential.

Despite these Soviet overtones, political scientists here cite the new Polish-Czech social welfare and legal assistance agreements as particularly noteworthy case studies for government administrators regardless of ideological positions.

Insurance Exchange

AN agreement for "Cooperative Social Policy and Administration" was signed April 5, 1948. Under its provisions, which only recently became fully effective, Polish-Czech wage earners who qualify for social insurance, retain all their claims upon transferring (or being transferred) to jobs in one or the other country.

This agreement also provides transfer rights to medical attention, disability insurance, paid-up sick leave and old-age assistance.

As for the new Polish-Czech legal assistance pact, which Czech Minister of Justice M. Cepicka and Polish Minister M. Swaitkowski described last January 21 as "without precedent in international relations," it provides:

1. Direct legal action in civil and criminal matters without the need of invoking diplomatic machinery.
2. Equal validity of court documents issued in either country.
3. Equal validity of court sentences imposed in either country on citizens of either state.
4. The same inheritance rights to property in either state.

Joint Industry

MOST important in recent Polish-Czech relations, although not as novel, is the Polish-Czechoslovak Council for Economic Cooperation. While set up two years ago, observers here pointed out that only recently has the council shown evidence of being an impressive force for the amalgamation of the two countries into a cohesive economic unit.

The scope of this agreement can probably be best realized from a statement of Poland's Minister of Industry and Commerce, Hilary Minc. Speaking at an anniversary celebration of the Council at Prague, he declared:

"We must work out within the shortest time possible a regional production plan so as to avoid a duplication of efforts; we must speed the construction of joint factories in both countries, and, finally, we must consider exchanging skilled and unskilled labor where such shortages exist."

This policy pronouncement also revealed that "it is high time for the Polish Baltic Sea and the Polish Baltic coast to become Czechoslovakia's sea and Czechovakia's coastline as well."

Since then, Poland has in fact granted Czechoslovakia part of the port of Stettin (Szczcin), Germany's former city on the west bank of the Oder River about 100 miles from Berlin. As part of this concession, Czechoslovakia is permitted to build whatever port facilities it wishes without any administrative restrictions.

Tourists Included

THE ECONOMIC pact has been refined to also include "mutual assistance to prevent customs violations, regulation of labor laws, regulation of border traffic and tourist travel."

The council now administers eight commissions which in themselves indicate the extent of this economic cooperation. These commissions are planning and statistics, investments, finance, transportation, commerce, agriculture, science and technology, and industry.

As part of the council's work, a "number of joint establishments are also projected, such as a joint experimental station for the construction of locomotives, shipyards on the Oder River, a bureau of standards, a factory of textile machines, a factory of caterpillar tractors and bulldozers."

Some of the actual results of this cooperative economy are revealed in reports stating that the output of the vast Oswiencim electric generation works in Poland, for example, is being shared on a half-and-half basis with Czechoslovakia.

Likewise, according to other specific reports, Czechoslovakia is to provide Poland with such immediate shipments as 50 big threshing machines, 100 harrows, 30 motor chaff cutters and 37 winnowing machines. These will supplement a previous arrangement which called for 150 mowers, 50 sheaf binders and various kinds of spare parts.

Cooperative Education

WITH this in mind, there is considerable significance to such seemingly isolated statements here and there that "Czechoslovakia is to supply Poland with armature for electric motors, and electric equipment for Diesel locomotives." And Poland, in turn, "is expected within the near future to ship to Czechoslovakia thousands of tons of machine castings."

Furthermore, the intensity of this policy of cooperation can be gauged from announcements that the Polish Cooperative Union is now engaged in "labor competition" with its Czech counterpart to execute respective production plans for 1949.

In line with this, mutual obligations were reported signed last January 5 to assure fulfillment of plans for cooperative purchase of agricultural products, sales of goods in the countryside, developing and training of cooperative cadres and for social and political education, presumably along lines prescribed by Moscow.

The net effect of all this, observers here point out, is not only an amazing example of unrestricted international relations but also a sobering display of Communist determination to strengthen itself by drastic and direct methods.

Confucius Debated 2500 Years

By William Glover
Associated Press Staff Writer

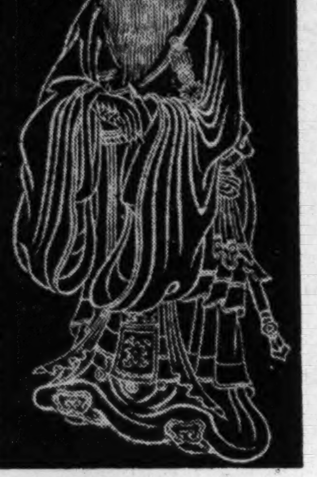
NEW YORK.—Confucius the confusing, they should nave called him.

Pretty soon now it is 2500 vears since his birth. In all that time the scholars haven't found out what he was really like or quit arguing about it. The only thing sure is that he was a key figure of world history. And he has been called about every good and bad word in the dictionary.

Most of the experts say his bithday was translated into modern calendar) August 27, 551 B. C. Others say it happened in the middle of the next winter. Or maybe the year before.

His parents were either distinguished nobility, or they were nobodies. No one knows their names, and Confucius himself let out that he came of humble origin. (His name is just the Latinized form of a Chinese phrase meaning K'ung the master; K'ung was the family name).

Somehow (you take your pick again on details) he set up as a teacher on government and politics. For the rest of his life he was busy teaching others how to get good jobs with the feudal lords who had split China into an endless and constantly warring assortment of petty states.



An old artist's conception of Confucius. The likeness is probably as accurate as most of the "facts" known about him

Sought Backing

APPARENTLY Confucius couldn't learn the know-how of hanging onto a job himself. Again the scholars argue. Some say he became even prime minister and minister of crime in his native state of Lu. (Lu was in the southwest part of what is now Shantung Province in north China.) Other researchers believe after digging into earlier records that he may have been given some fancy titles but no real authority.

H. G. Creel, associate professor at the University of Chicago and author of the new biography, "Confucius, the Man and the Myth" (John Day), says he died believing himself a failure who would be forgotten.

The scholars agree pretty well that when he was about 50, Confucius set out on 15 years of wandering, teaching and looking for a ruler to put his theories into operation. He worked with his disciples until he died at 70 or 72. The experts are still arguing whether his student followers numbered about 20 or into the thousands.

There is argument also over the type of rule he sought. Some have termed him a reactionary who was looking back to the "old days;" others insist he was trying for a "bloodless revolution" and government for the welfare of all the people, a radical idea then.

Some Detractors

THERE are plenty of other debates, too. Did he write, or at least edit, a number of the classic Chinese books that have survived the centuries? Creel points out that scholars "have burned midnight oil in what is perhaps the most extensive attempt in all history to solve a cryptogram" in trying to dig hidden meaning out of one of the volumes he supposedly authored.

The same controversy goes for music. He apparently was interested in it, studied it, but there is no indication he wrote about it.

Others say he was a great believer in class distinction; was the engineer of an extensive program of intrigue that led to a major East China war; that he indorsed the cheating of foreigners, and even recommended capital punishment for a number of crimes, including "inventing strange clothing."

It wasn't until several hundred years after his death that the Confucian legend really began growing. His followers had kept his name alive. When the Ch'in conquerors came along they tried to burn all Confucian records and kill off his followers. The Ch'ins didn't last long and the Han emperors who followed took the opposite course. They sweetened up the Confucians with office and developed a literature that the scholars agree did distort the original philosophy. What parts of various writings were genuine and which the inserts is still being argued.

Voltaire Excited

THE western world was left out of all discussion until the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries. Then Jesuit missionaries reached China and sent back glowing reports of the efficiency of Chinese government and the philosophy of Confucianism which in the intervening centuries had become a basic part of the empire. Voltaire and other leaders of the "great enlightenment" glowed over Confucius and he became a patron saint of progress. But then other reports came in from the Far East that dimmed enthusiasm over "progressive" Chinese rule and Confucius was once more in the center of debate.

The study of his works is still going on and some researchers like Creel say that elements of his philosophy played a role in the creation of Sun Yat Sen's twentieth century Chinese republic and even affected the thinking of Thomas Jefferson.

Confucius himself had very little to say for the ages. The "Analects," the collection of his conversations which others put down, are the only direct statements of his opinions.

But in one way he showed himself very wise indeed. Nowhere on record is there any account that Confucius ever said anything pro or con concerning women.

Talk Is Still Important

Insanity Has Three Treatments

By Howard W. Blakeslee
Associated Press Science Editor

PSYCHIATRY now has three kinds of treatment for mental illness and insanity—talk, shock and drug. This is a long advance over the beginning of the present century, when talk was the main treatment.

The new status was brought out at the annual meeting of the American Psychiatric Association in Montreal. Curiously enough to laymen, talk remains as important as shock or drugs, and sometimes indispensable even when the other two are used.

In talk, the patient is led to recall a forgotten or shunned thing in his life that has driven him out of his mind.

A variation of the talk treatment was reported in a test where a person subject to worry draws pictures. The pictures are human beings—and the test is named draw-a-person. Artistic skill is not important. The figure sometimes reveals a worry that the patient either is afraid to talk about, or doesn't realize.

The revelations come in two ways. One is by omission of those parts of the figure that are causing worry. The other is by extra details lavished on the part of the body which is the source of worry. Sometimes mere heavy shading of parts of the body with sexual significance gives the clew.

Brain tumors have been indicated by unusual attention to drawing heads, hats and hair.

Schizophrenics, or split personalities, tend to disregard proportions. They draw figures too large for the space available, so that they may have to cut off feet and legs. They draw extra long necks. They also may draw very small figures on a large piece of paper.

Shock treatments started 20 years ago with insulin, followed by metrazol and 10 years ago by electricity. The shocks produced deep unconsciousness and usually convulsions. Why people get better is still unknown.

But now milder and milder shocks are used, in addition to the severe jolts. This has led to a type of treatment midway between shock and drugs. It is called narcosis, and ranges from unconsciousness to long sleep induced by drugs.

One continuous-sleep treatment is induced by a drug called Cloetta's mixture. It contains seven chemical compounds and is not new. With it, a group of 57 mentally ill persons was repeatedly put to sleep with few waking periods for two to three weeks. These were serious cases such as dementia praecox, manic depressives and psychoneurotics. Other treatments had failed. A few of the patients returned to work and some other were able to go home.

Battlefield Treatment

ANOTHER new treatment uses laughing gas to produce only a few minutes' unconsciousness. When the patient recovers, his doctor talks to him. This treatment is used only in the last stages of recovery.

Another treatment from the dentist's office is an old drug known as sonnoform. It is used like the barbiturates given to shell-shocked and battle-fatigued soldiers of World War II. Under the sedative effects, patients get rid of fears that they are guilty of cowardice. They recovery as did most of the fatiqued GIs.

Completely in the drug field is Cytochrome C. This is a chemical present in all human beings. It takes part in getting oxygen to the body's tissues. Recently it has been given to people apparently losing their minds due to senility. Cytochrome C gives their brains added oxygen. These persons become more alert, more relaxed, their memories improve and they take renewed interest in their immediate affairs.

According to reports, probably more than half the insane and mentally ill also have physical changes, which are either results of their mental upsets, or causes. Either way, the psychiatrists are treating the physical ills as fast as found and as fast as remedies are developed.

Reds Besieging 50 Million Catholics

By Frank O'Brien
Associated Press Staff Writer

VATICAN CITY.—In five countries of eastern Europe under Communist domination, the Roman Catholic Church is locked in the most critical combat for its life since early Christian days.

The story of the conflict in Poland, Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Yugoslavia and Romania has been gathered from sources native to those countries. It is a story of church-state conflict, ranging from violent suppression in Yugoslavia and Romania to a careful cat-and-mouse game in Poland.

Yet in every country a remarkably consistent strategical pattern emerges.

Here is the step-by-step method by which the Communists have laid seige to the 50 million Catholics in eastern Europe:

1. Avoid until the last attacking religion, or the Roman Catholic Church, as such. Attack instead individuals, high-level church leadership and the Vatican.

2. Strike first in the cities, where secular education may have weakened faith and industrialization may have given Marxism a start. Attack last in the country, where the village priest is regarded as all-knowing and all-powerful, and where simple, unquestioning religious faith is strongest.

3. Set up anti-Vatican "Catholic" churches and organizations.

4. Smite the shepherd before going among the flock. (In condemning the trial and life imprisonment of Josef Cardinal Mindszenty, primate of Hungary, Pope Pius XII quoted from Mat. XXVI, 31, "I shall strike the shepherd and the sheep of the flock shall be dispersed.")

5. Destroy Catholic schools, and thus their effect on coming generations.

6. Separate the church from the life of the people by destroying the web of church charities, orphanages, youth organizations, workers' organizations and social clubs.

7. Squeeze the church back within the portals of its temples by wiping out its militant lay organization, Catholic Action, and the usually allied Catholic press.

8. When all of this has been done, with proper breathing spells, close the churches.

Here is how Polish, Czech, Romanian, Hungarian and Yugoslav sources at the Vatican outlined the battle between their church and their states:

Yugoslavia

YUGOSLAVIA is 49 per cent Orthodox, 39 per cent Roman Catholic, 11 per cent Moslem and 1 per cent Protestant. The Roman Catholics are centered in Crotia and Slovenia, the Orthodox in Serbia.

Yugoslavia was the first area of "frontal attack" on the Roman Catholic Church. The condemnation in September, 1946, of Alojzijc Stepinac, Archbishop of Zagreb, to 16 years' imprisonment as a war criminal was a sign of what was to come.

Before 1945, Tito's Partisans were friendly and cooperative with the church. Soon after Tito came to power this fraternization ended.

Tito's first big move was to take over Catholic schools. They were attended by some 100,000 pupils. This was followed by prohibition of charitable activities. The Catholic press was wiped out. Archbishop Stepinac himself dissolved Catholic Action in 1945 because known membership was a virtual death sentence.

Yugoslav sources estimate that approximately 400 priests and nuns were killed, many in groups of from 10 to 20, in monasteries and convents. The bishops of Dubrovnik and Krizevee were among those who died.

Today, there are said to be more than 300 priests in prisons and camps. About one-quarter of the churches have been closed. In recent months high taxes have been laid upon baptisms, marriages and communion. Religious pilgrimages have been forbidden.

Romania

OF ROMANIA, Vatican Radio said on August 2 that the Communist regime has applied the dictum of Nero. That "the Christians do not exist." Romania is the only place a Communist regime has gone so far as to outlaw an entire church.

Romania has 15 million Orthodox, 1,500,000 Roman Catholics and 1,500,000 Uniats. These last are a 250-year-old offshoot of the Orthodox Church which preserves the Eastern rite but swears allegiance to Rome.

It has been outlawed. Vatican sources say its bishops have been interned or jailed, and two tortured, for refusing to adhere to the (pro-Soviet) Orthodox Church. Many of its priests have been jailed or killed, and the rest are in hiding. Uniat services are now conducted only clandestinely.

Three of the five Roman Catholic (Latin rite) bishops have been deposed, and the church's religious orders dissolved.

All Catholic schools of both rites have been closed, religious instruction in state schools is forbidden, the Catholic press has been wiped out and Catholic properties have been confiscated.

Hungary

THE church-state war began here in 1945 with the dissolution of Catholic lay organizations, which were powerful in this almost solidly Catholic country. It reached its apex when Cardinal Mindszenty was imprisoned for life this year on a charge of treason.

In the last four years 450 priests have been reported imprisoned, and most never heard from again. The flourishing Catholic daily press has been abolished. All foreign relief agencies withdrew their help in May, 1948, when the Government ruled that 80 per cent of their goods must be distributed by the government.

In June, 1948, the government decreed that all Catholic schools must come under the state. More than half of the schools in Hungary were in Catholic hands.

Today there is a breathing spell in Hungary, after the shock of the Cardinal's imprisonment. All churches are open and the services are given freely. There is no taxation of the sacraments.

Czechoslovakia

THERE is a strong anti-Vatican history here, dating far behind Communist influence. Slovakia is devoutly Roman Catholic, but Bohemia and Moravia, while 80 per cent Roman Catholic, have a free thinking, anti-Vatican history. After the first World War, a separatist, national Czech church, was established at Prague, with a million members in Bohemia and Moravia. In 1925 the papal nuncio left Prague because of anti-Vatican demonstrations. There was another outburst against the Vatican in 1933.

In 1944, during the rebellion against the Germans, laws were passed by the insurgents abolishing Catholic schools and press. In 1945, the coalition government under Liberal Eduard Benes legalized and partly enforced the rebellion decrees. After the Communist coup of February, 1948, the Communist government had only to enforce, vigorously, the laws already on the books. It did, closing the first phase of the church-state clash by wiping out Catholic schools, press, lay organizations and charities.

The second phase was opened this spring when the Communists outlawed Catholic Action and set up one of their own, for which they demanded church recognition.

Josep Beran, Archbishop of Prague, refused. Since then he has been almost a prisoner in his palace. Other bishops have remained in their residences. The Czech Communist government has warned that any attempt to enforce the Vatican's excommunication of militant Communists would be considered treason.

Churches, meanwhile, are open.

Poland

POLAND counts its wounds from Communism back to the Treaty of Riga, after the First World War. This ceded the dioceses of Minsk, Zitomir, Kamieniec and Mohilev to Russia. In these areas, there were 3,500,000 Catholics, with 600 priests and 400 churches. Ten years later, there were only two churches open and two priests at work.

At present, Poland appears to have been left to the last. It is believed this is because, after the almost complete extinction of the Jews under the Germans, Poland is an almost solidly Roman Catholic country.

The slogan, to date, is, "No open conflict." Officially there is tolerance. No law has been passed abolishing Catholic schools, but district prefects have been given full powers to proceed as they see fit. Thus, there are regions where there is still almost complete liberty for parochial education, others where church schools have been closed.

The Catholic press has been reduced to two weeklies. Discrimination against Catholic Action members, particularly in employment, means few belong. Divorce, anathema to the Roman Catholic Church, has been made easy for those who do not have children.

The Archbishop of Pinsk was imprisoned when he was involved in a conflict with a renter. About 400 priests have been arrested or have disappeared.

The churches are open, and some Catholic social and charitable organizations still function.

The Magazine Rack

By Katharine Graham

HOLIDAY chose as its theme this month the Hudson. Carl Carmer traces it physically from its source high in the Adirondacks to its brackish end, where the river bed lies below the level of the sea and the ocean tides ride upstream. Hence the name given it by the Algonquin Indians, "The River that Flows Two Ways."

Historically, Carmer also begins when the explorer Verrazano reported to his employer, Francis I of France, in 1524 of the "steep little hills" from which "a mighty deep-mouthed river ran into the sea." "American history speaks from the banks of this river," says Carmer.

During the Revolution the English tried to separate New England from the rest of the rebelling colonies by capturing the line of the Hudson. All along that line today, says Carmer, one may read the story of that failure.

"By the early days of the nineteenth century, when many New York merchants had become prosperous, an elaborate home on the Hudson became the proper symbol of their new standard of living." The impulse toward social "improvement" brought the erection of castles similar to those on the Rhine, and the deliberate creation of ruins.

Mrs. James Roosevelt, mother of Franklin, once described to Carmer the life she lived as a young girl on the east bank. The river was merely a magnificent scenic backdrop against which the rich valley families lived out their aristocratic lives. "Social life consisted of entertaining and being entertained by families who lived behind other walls up or down the river. She herself, she said, had married and moved from one east-bank walled estate to another about twenty miles upriver."

Jerome Weidman writes a separate piece on Hyde Park, and E. J. Kahn, jr., on West Point.

IS chastity outmoded, bravely asks the Woman's Home Companion. You can easily guess that Dr. David R. Mace concludes that it is not, else never would the question have been broached on the cover of one of America's favorite home magazines.

Dr. Mace divides the subject in three. He discusses people who are anticipating a prospective marriage; and cases where one, or both, are married to someone else.

His conclusion in general is that great progress has been made in this century in our thinking about sex, but that our liberation should not include the abandonment of chastity. Rather, he says, we need "a new idea of chastity, as a discipline gladly accepted so that human love can be kept warm and tender and unsullied. This idea of chastity means refusing to use sex at subhuman levels and for selfish and anti-social ends."

LOOK has an article by a Pittsburgh mother, Emily Gardiner Neal, "Our Daughters Have Too Much Sex Education."

The goal sought by our high schools is commendable, but they are carrying it too far, says Mrs. Neal. Instruction is given in too great physical detail and too much is said about abnormalities, she complains. And on the other hand, she charges, the schools have not made clear to their students why illicit sex relations are not to be tolerated.

Walter White reveals that there exists a chemical that can change the color of skin from black to white. In a story copyrighted by the Cowles magazines, White points out that the chemical, if perfected, could alter the structure of society; could in fact conquer the color line. It's a big if, though. "In its present form, it may poison users, even bring death."

AS her children approach marriageable age, Author Pearl Buck ruminates in Good Housekeeping on the Chinese custom. "Chinese families have the pleasure of helping to choose the people their children marry." This she thinks is more sensible and more successful than the American way.

GOOD HOUSEKEEPING

"The Chinese are wise enough to know that any individual is inescapably part of the family," she writes, "and that he will be happier in love if his mate also pleases the family." We must return to the large family system to gain continuity and balance, she thinks. The old and young need each other. Lin Yutang once said that the most important decision in the life of Americans is made at the time judgment is most incompetent: namely, when people are in love.

Medical Reporter Maxine Davis writes on "Care of the Breasts."

ALSO recommended is Craig Thompson's "What Happened to the Fair Deal" in Collier's. The President's troubles with Congress do not involve deep seated antagonisms . . . but are based instead on differing interpretations of the 1948 elections, and honest differences of opinion." Many Democratic Congressmen were elected by a greater majority than Truman, hence felt no indebtedness, Thompson points out.

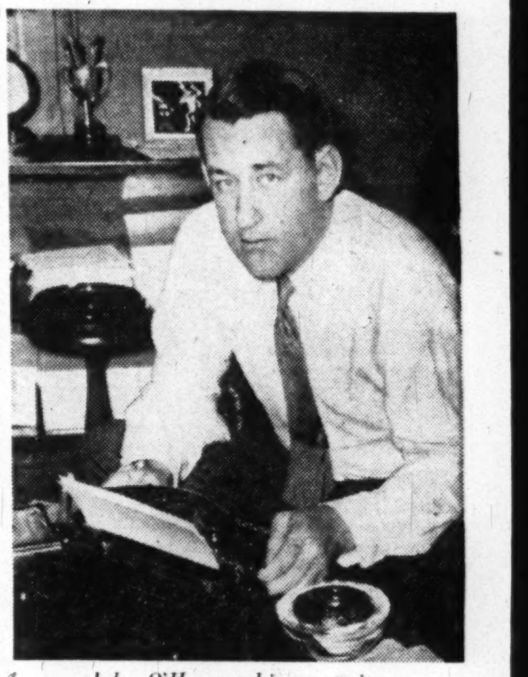
'Significance' at a Price

The Irish Won't Like Mr. O'Hara

By Sterling North

A RAGE TO LIVE. By John O'Hara. Random House. 590 pp. $3.75.



John O'Hara at his typewriter

A SUPERFICIAL reading of this novel might lead one to believe that the only words in Youth's Bright Lexicon are four-letter words, and that the people who live around Harrisburg (here called "Fort Penn"), Pa., have only one interest and occupation outside of farming.

This would be a totally unfair assumption. In addition to the bedroom and bathroom scenes which litter this ambitious chronicle, there are marriages, funerals, charity fairs, turkey shoots and numerous other episodes in which pure sex is often less than 75 per cent of the total attraction.

Mr. O'Hara's not-so-sentimental journey to the scenes of his childhood will not endear him to citizens living in the valley of the Susquehanna (here called the "Nesquehela").

The upper upper class, as Marquand would call them, will be slightly annoyed by O'Hara's frank revelation of the way in which they dominate politics, banking, education, journalism, the judiciary and the social life of the valley through interlocking family interests and influence.

The Pennsylvania Dutch will suspect him of being patronizing.

But the Irish (very few of whom O'Hara portrays as upper upper) will be furious. With three notable exceptions they are pictured in a most unflattering lignt.

One brave doctor, one brilliant lawyer and one lovable housekeeper help to temper O'Hara's blast at others of this ethnic and religious stock.

The Main Story Line

THE principal action of this book takes place in and around Fort Penn in the years 1917-20. The principal character is Grace Caldwell Tate, whose "rage to live" leads her into one scrape after another all her life.

Grace is shown as a headstrong, beautiful, essentially honest, highly selfish and utterly fearless young woman who inherits the name, fortune, social and civic influence (if not the corresponding sense of responsibility) which goes with the Caldwell name—one of the richest and oldest families in the region.

Married to Sidney Tate, one of the few thoroughly likeable, respectable and responsible characters in the book (but unfortunately an outsider with an English accent), she manages to remain faithful to him for 10 or 12 years before starting a series of affairs which create not only scandal but tragedy throughout the county.

Sidney is one of those rare individuals in O'Hara fiction, a monogamous male, and he expects his wife, whom he adores, to be a monogamous female. When she starts meeting the violent Roger Bannon, the marriage blows up in a series of the most effective and moving scenes in contemporary fiction.

From the death of her husband and youngest son through polio to the last page of the postscript, Grace continues to wreak havoc with her "rage to live." Only after a jealous wife (quite logically) tries to kill her does she finally leave the area where she has reigned like some queen of Avignon, a law unto her erotic self.

Fascinated by Detail

LIKE the "Frankie and Johnnie" ballad, it might be said, "This story has no moral, this story has no end." It merely goes to show, I guess, that there isn't much good in humanity.

But how thoroughly O'Hara enjoys the spectacle of almost simian copulation and feline ferocity, tempered only slightly by tradition and religion.

Every period detail (dresses, cars, songs, dances) fascinates O'Hara. His ear for dialogue continues to be one of the sharpest in America. His report upon the morals anad manners of each strata of society is devastating and for the most part highly convincing.

On the other hand, this book, though far more ambitious and probably more "significant" than any of his earlier novels, is not as tightly written as "Appointment in Samara," "Butterfield 8" or even "Pal Joey." While O'Hara has been maturing as a social critic, he has not been appreciably improving his prose style or his sense of story construction. His episodic approach bespeaks the fictioneer who has given too much attention to the short story and too little to the novel as an art form. Also we might have done with fewer short and ugly words used in this novel to the point of satiation.

One other possibly adverse comment: how far should a member of a minority go in castigating his own people? It is quite true that the other extreme of wrapping all minorities in cotton wool has begun to endanger freedom of the press and is actually increasing animosities by curtailing natural outlets of debate under the idiotic assumption that minorities (unlike majorities) are completely above criticism. Similar "progressive" treatment of children produces children who are brats and parents who are neurotics. Every class, race and religion should be able to take criticism gracefully and profitably. But should it be criticism as sharp as that in "A Rage to Live" it offers an interesting subject for healthy discussion.

Notes on the Margin

A Novel Buds in Lee's Footsteps

By Lee Grove

SCOTT HART of 3014½ R st. nw. was born just off main street in Farmville, Va., and thereby hangs a tale—"Eight April Days," coming from Coward-McCann September 12.

Down the main street slogged Lee's retreating army from Petersburg to Appomattox and the final denouement April 9, 1865. Though Hart wasn't born until 1902, he remembers the retreat well, through the eyes of his grandparents.

"The disintegrating Confederate army begged food from everyone, and when the pursuing Federal army came along they had to shell out food to feed the people living there," according to Hart. "My grandmother said she was never so glad to see anyone as those Union people."

All through his childhood Hart heard about the retreat, and as a 'possum-hunting boy he got to know the countryside well.

"It is a section of poor farmers, tobacco land, slash pine; a land cut by red gullies and melancholy creeks. The darkness of that dark road is a perfect setting for tragedy. The retreat was a classical journey's end," according to Hart.

And so, from the stories of his grandparents and their contemporaries, familiarity with the road that passed through Farmville, about 175 miles south of Washington, and an appreciation of the darkly dramatic situation, Hart has written his 188-page novel.

Hart, the son of a Farmville newspaper editor, worked on Richmond papers, then came North to work for The Washington Post. Later he went to Time Magazine's Washington bureau, and is currently associate editor of Changing Times, the Kiplinger Magazine, where he is known as "The Scooter" and is appreciated as a raconteur.

FROM the Congressional Record Appendix, in the form of "Extension of Remarks" of the Hon. James T. Patterson of Connecticut in the House, August 11:

"Mr. Speaker, since my insertion in the Record of my opposition to the award by the Library of Congress of $1000 for the best poetry of 1948 to Ezra Pound, I have received many communications from interested persons throughout the country. There has been unanimity of opinion that the award was entirely unjustified, and that Pound's work has little resemblance to poetry as we, in America, know it.

"Among those who were kind enough to comment was Benjamin F. Phemister of Indianapolis, Ind., who is also known as the Bard of the Brandywine. Mr. Phemister has been kind enough to forward me a copy of one of his poetry works (sic), "Wave, Old Glory, Wave!" I believe the publication of this poem in the Congressional Record will demonstrate the difference between true poetry and the meanderings of the indicted traiter, Pound . . ."

"Love-daring sons of Glory Land,
In calm or battle blast,
Strike down the wretch who lifts a hand
To mar that starlit mast!
Then wave, Old Glory, far and wide,
And let Gitoutski rave:
Defend we will, through (sic) death betide,
Wave on, Old Glory, wave!"

Morgan's Lapses Are Forgivable

Pea Soup Transmuted to Claret

THE RIVER LINE. By Charles Morgan. MacMillan. 195 pp. $2.75.

WOULD you kill an innocent man if the lives of many other innocent human beings seemed to depend upon it?

CHARLES MORGAN

That is the tragic dilemma at the core of the parable Charles Morgan has aimed at his American readers. I think he also means, "Would you drop an atom bomb on innocent Europeans to keep the 'obsessed men' of the Kremlin from enslaving the planet?"

Charles Morgan, who is a "Quietist," has endured two World Wars and does not wish to see a third. But he is convinced that World War III is inevitable and is already struggling with the burden of guilt we in part must bear.

Most readers will miss the deeply hidden parable but will be held by the melodrama of the story itself, played out not in some future war but against a backdrop of World War II.

During the last war the underground "River Line" in France rescued and passed along Allied fliers to safety. One important station along that line was operated by Marie, a French girl. To her home came Julian, a British secret agent; Sturgess, an American aviator, and finally a man all three admired and Marie actually loved, the long-legged, cheerful Heron, presumably an English officer escaping from a German prison.

All three of the others realized that Heron was one of the most admirable human beings they had ever known. But his German was almost glib. He took strange chances along the line. He even purchased stamps to mail letters to an address in Germany. In fact, he seemed to be threatening the whole "River Line," which with such agony, secrecy, and hard labor had remained hidden from the Germans.

The story runs on two chronological levels: (1) the present visit of Sturgess to his friend Julian, now married to Marie, and (2) the remembered events at Marie's villa in France. The double time scheme enriches both past and present.

A Slow Clarification

CHARLES MORGAN has many virtues and several vices as a writer. He is one of the last of the "stylists," self-consciously aware of the beauty of his own prose and sometimes maddeningly slow and involved in revealing the true purpose of his story.

Such disregard of reader interest can only spring from selfconfidence bordering on arrogance. Generally speaking, it takes a Henry James, a Virginia Woolf or a Marcel Proust to hold the unwilling reader through sheer verbal virtuosity.

But over the years Morgan has slowly clarified his style from the muddled magnificence of "The Fountain," through the mystic meanderings of "Sparkenbroke" to the translucent prose of his later period.

Changing water into wine is an impressive miracle. But changing the pea soup of Morgan's earliest efforts to the claret of "The Voyage" (1940) is something one must reread to believe.

"The River Line" is not without its intriguing, shadowy depths, but elsewhere it is as clear as spring water and as cool and sparkling.

Readers will forgive him for his continuous testing and tasting of human emotions, his weighing of values and motives, his labyrinthine uncoiling of plot and character development, and his sometimes tantalizing and sometimes infuriating delay in clarifying his ultimate meaning when they come to the last few chapters of the story. The denouement really justifies the technique...

And the morganatic marriage of pure poetry with pure melodrama will also be forgiven in the light of the significance he builds into both these elements of his story.

Philosophy Lives On

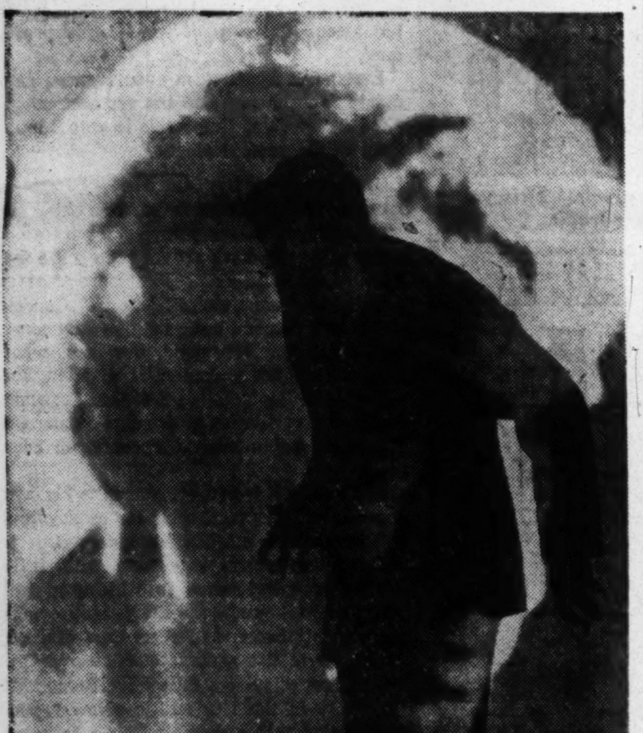
MORGAN, in all nine of his novels published over the last 30 years, has been reaching out for something beyond life, a tenuous thread, hinting more than asserting his belief in immortality. In his latest book he has refined this idea into something far more acceptable to modern skeptical minds. Heron continues to live after death only in the memory of those who knew him; only in the philosophical concepts and attitudes toward life which influenced those who loved him but killed him.

And it is in the forgiveness Heron allegedly proferred his executioners that Morgan finds an indulgence for us in the crisis we may be facing. I think the author means to say that many of the innocent who may be atomized in the smashing of the Kremlin gang will understand why they are dying. I fear this is not only an unjustified, but a sentimentalized, perversion of what at best can be only a half truth. Few bystanders are so Christlike as to die gladly through cruel happenstance in a war between Titans. But like the characters in this story, we may ultimately have no choice.

Politically, Morgan is still an individualist; a conservative in the sense of one who wishes to preserve traditions as well as human dignity; a nonwhining member of the opposition in England's "service state." He accepts the hairshirt of socialism and the necessity for austerity with typical English courage. On these matters and others he deals in reserved and admirable understatement.

But he does not suffer gladly those who would abdicate to tyranny. He believes that immoral force can only be overcome by greater force in the hands of moral men. Having seen in two World Wars by how narrow a margin civilization saved itself from the 'Obsessed Men," he counsels unceasing vigilance. We must keep "The River Line" clear for rescues still to be made on the continent of Europe.—STERLING NORTH.

In a Nutshell



"The Case of the Housekeeper's Hair," by Christopher Bush, boasts an unusual jacket design, even for a mystery

THE CASE OF THE HOUSEKEEPER'S HAIR. By Christopher Bush. Macmillan. $2.50.

A MAN named Pallart tells Ludovic Travers, the English amateur investigator, that he is planning to commit a murder, and Travers passes it on to his friend, Superintendent Wharton of Scotland Yard. Without much more ado, Pallart himself is strangled. Then the chief suspect, Pallart's tenant, meets the same fate. An escaped German POW steps into the story, and a very unusual French chef. Travers finally traces the crime back to the Resistance days in France, and the betrayal of a girl to the Gestapo. Bush is up to par with an intricate but plausible plot, and he uses the sweet old housekeeper up to the very last page. But where do these people get enough rationed petrol to do all that shuttling around the Essex countryside?

TRIAL AND TERROR. By Lawrence Treat. Morrow. $2.50.

WREN VENICE is an art critic whose mentor was the late Adam Kalish, a great artist. Called upon to authenticate a newly discovered Kalish, she remembers every detail of its painting, down to an incongruous blob of red in one corner. But the picture is actually a forgery, and from that circumstance stems the murder of an art collector and eventually the trial of a lovable old gallery owner. Treat has boned up enough on art copying and art forgery to make that part of his story convincing, and the trial itself is well done, although its outcome hinges on a well known piece of legal trickery. But the terror of the title is almost entirely in Wren's mind, and long before the author gives her a sedative you want to smack some sense into her pretty, empty head. The yarn won't bore you, however.

HALO IN BRASS. By John Evans. Bobbs-Merrill. $2.50.

A NICE old couple in Lincoln, Nebr., hire Paul Pine to find their daughter, who has been swallowed up by Chicago. She's been engulfed by a lot worse than the Windy City, it develops, after several young women with perverted tendencies are erased by means of nylon hose twisted around the throat. You'll discern that this story involves a milieu not often studied in mystery fiction, and that it probably was not intended for circulation in Girl Scout camps. It should keep you puzzled all the way through, however, and that will be at one sitting. Evans' scene ranges from slatternly rooming houses to millionaires' row along the North Shore; from bordellos to chrome-and-plastic roulette places, but the Paul Pine brand of dialogue goes with him everywhere. Rough, tough and vivid.

A MATTER OF TASTE, by Richard Lockridge. Lippincott. $2.75.

SOME people like thick steaks, cooked rare and seasoned only with salt, and for them Oliver Hillard has the utmost contempt. Like many New Yorkers with inherited wealth, he knows sauces and wines and bedroom technique, and all the sensual arts. But he is a true connoisseur; he must savor life itself. He must kill a human being to achieve the ultimate sensation, the perfection of his own personality. This realization comes to him at the age of 52, and he begins to plan. The very slow flowering of his "sublime" urge is the substance of Lockridge's first solo novel, and although the author stretches his gossamer fabric to the limit he maintains suspense. Inasmuch as this is Lockridge's first novel without the collaboration of his wife, Frances, the reader will deduce the source of the dizzy dialogue in the "Mr. and Mrs. North" mysteries. Richard's dialogue is often pedantic. This is not a mystery, incidentally; it is a psychological study of megalomania, with only incidental action.

Aspirin Age

22 Articles Span Dizzy 2 Decades

THE ASPIRIN AGE, 1919-1949. Edited by Isabel Leighton. Simon & Schuster, $3.95.

LOOKING back, the United States in the years between World War I and World War II appears "as a strange, uncharted, and enchanted land; so many of the personalities and events that challenged our imaginations during that time now seem almost to have been a part of a spell . . . hectic, frenzied, not always beneficent . . . cast over the entire country."

In accordance with this premis, set forth in Isabel Leighton's short prefatory note, the feuilletons in this name-studded anthology vary from the significant to the trivial, or, in another light, from the usually very entertaining to the occasionally dull.

High-Level Start

"THE Aspirin Age" opens with an edifying bit of writing, "The Forgotten Men of Versailles" by Harry Hansen. It is followed by Herbert Asbury's "The Noble Experiment of Izzie and Moe," an entertaining footnote to Prohibition that no one would construe as an appraisal of the Volstead years.

There are other pieces dealing with the general, besides Hansen's including Thurman Arnold on "The Crash—and What It Meant," Arthur M. Schlesinger, jr.'s, "The First Hundred Days of the New Deal," and Jonathan Daniels' "Pearl Harbor Sunday: The End of an Era."

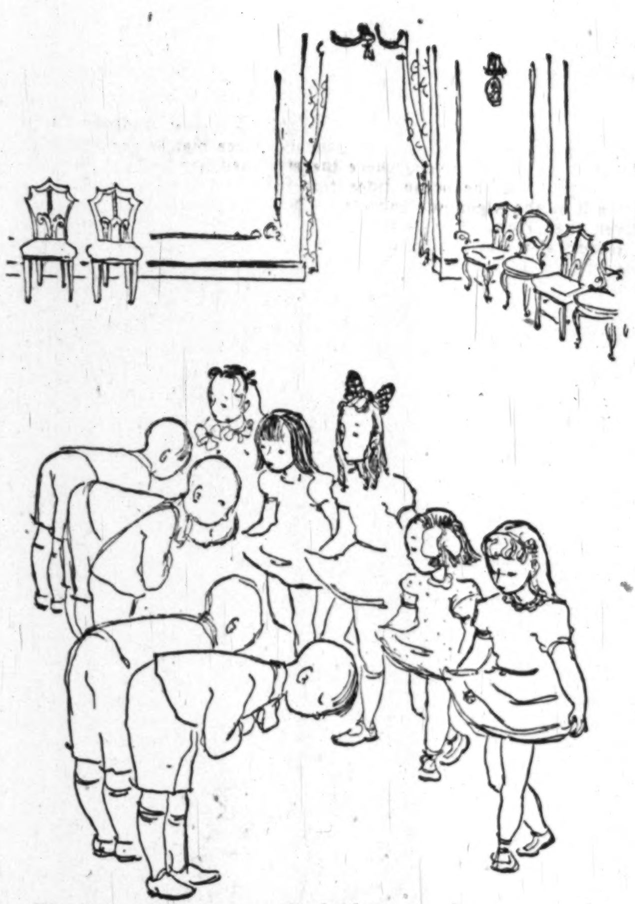
Outnumbering these are the pieces on the Asbury level, such as Cary McWilliams' "Aimee Semple McPherson," Morris Markey's "The Mysterious Death of Starr Faithfull," Keith Munro's "Full House: My Life With the Dionnes," Gene Tunney's "My Fights with Jack Dempsey," Margaret Case Harriman's "The King and the Girl from Baltimore," Joel Sayre's "The Man on the Ledge," and Charles Jackson's "The Night the Martians Came."

Harding to Willkie

IT IS TO THESE that most readers will probably gravitate first. To these and to another group, also dealing with specific instances but with subject matter of a little more significance, which includes such pieces as Samuel Hopkins Adam's "The Timely Death of President Harding," Phil Stong's "The Last Days of Sacco and Vanzetti," Wallace Stegner's "The Radio Priest and His Flock," William McFee's "The Peculiar Fate of the Morro Castle," and Roscoe Drummond's "Wendell Willkie: A Story in Courage."

In gravitating first to these two later groups of articles, the reader's instinct will be sound, for this is primarily a book of nonfiction entertainment.

The 22 articles, by authors nearly all of whom were at or near the scene of which they write, are strung out on a chronological system of one story for each year. It is an artifical device that has its structural weaknesses, but this is a case where the parts are greater than the whole. L. G.



The impact of two small children on the veteran of a thousand theatrical openings, is the subject of John Mason Brown's "Morning Faces," to be published by Whittlesey September 7. The book is illustrated by Susanne Suba, whose interpretation of dancing school is shown above

Satire Turns Melodrama

All Liberals Smeared By 'Portrait' of Phony

A SEA CHANGE. By Nigel Dennis. Houghon Mifflin. 372 pp. $3.50.

WEBSTER definies a "liberal" as one who "favors greater freedom in political or religious matters." Liberal (from the Latin liberalis, from liber, meaning free) is "befitting of a man of free birth . . . Not narrow or contracted in mind."

Mr. Dennis has written a book which seems to define the liberal as a man constantly on the verge of insanity, a toadying, vicious-minded pen-for-hire, who is so schizophrenic that all his life while preaching tolerance he has actually hated Jews, Catholics and Negroes.

Any similarity between what Webster calls a "liberal" and what Mr. Dennis calls a "liberal" is purely coincidental.

Currently it is fashionable to smear liberals, who constitute one of the few minorities which never threaten suit or boycott when subjected to slander or libel. So Mr. Dennis, who hates liberals like a former liberal (he used to write for the New Republic and is now on one of Henry Luce's publications), goes to work with a pail of mud and a broom to paint one of the ugliest portraits in current literature.

Blunders to Top

MAX DIVVER, chief protagonist of this satirical melodrama, comes from the Midwest, a region which is obviously terra incognita to Mr. Dennis. In New York he runs into the snide Communists and brooding Freudians who admittedly exist in large numbers at several New York institutions of higher learning. He learns that all of his kindly motives are highly suspect, that "reformists" are sentimental weaklings, that American democracy is utterly degenerate and that the only approaches to truth are dialectical materialism and psychoanalysis.

Max, who isn't very intelligent anyhow, soon learns the three accomplishments of his new friends—how to sneer, smear and leer. He gets a job on the "Forward," a propagandistic, leftist sheet owned by Mrs. Morgan, who has more money than brains. Through sheer good luck and blundering incompetence, he gets himself thrown out of Italy for starting a nonpolitical fist fight at an interview with Mussolini.

On his return to New York he is hailed as a hero and is soon editor of the "Forward," where he has a magnificent chance to air his ignorance in every issue.

Incidentally, Divver and all the other American characters in this book talk as though they were thinking in German and translating painfully into English. This is very peculiar, no? Until one remembers that Dennis was educated in Germany.

A Final Gaucherie

SELDOM does this novel rise above the level of vindictive self-accusation until Max Divver, to escape his second wife and his spoiled brat of a child, asks to be sent to the Polish Corridor where Hitler is planning to strike. With him goes an even more unlikable character, the sullen, epileptic, teen-age son of Mrs. Morgan.

This pair of perennial juvenile delinquents proceeds to raise hell, each in his own special way, through chapters which remind one alternately of Cassanova and Dumas pere, the Perils of Pauline and the more dreary pages of some Polish Baedeker. Into their lives comes a reactionary American engineer and his frustrated wife. To over-simplify a bit, the wife seduces the boy and the engineer (who later sells out to Hitler) politically seduces Max.

By sheer, blundering good luck and incompetence, Max achieves a death which his magazine can pervert into appearing heroic.

A Few Exceptions

WHAT is wrong with this picture? Practically everything.

A book which starts out to be a stinging satire of a certain type of phony liberal, manages instead to perforate in greater or lesser degree all men of goodwill with its blunderbuss.

It changes pace halfway through the story and becomes ludicrous melodrama.

It will give aid and comfort to both Communists and Tories at the expense of the currently hard-pressed middle-of-the-road liberals.

As in the case of "The Grand Design" by John Dos Passos, published earlier this year, "A Sea Change" should set off a violent controversy. The book will be praised, damned and (unfortunately) widely read by people in no position to judge the accuracy of its indictment. Perhaps out of the forthcoming debate there will emerge a fairer and truer portrait of the American liberal.—S. N.

. . . But Miller Only Grazes the Target

A Case History of Red Hysteria

By Alfred Steinberg

THE SURE THING. By Merle Miller. William Sloan Associates. 341 pp. $3.

IN THE quiet days of the thirties, when the Nazis were prowling about, loyalty was one of our less important concerns. Today, with the Politburo flexing its muscles, loyalty has become one of the most soul-searching words in our vocabulary. A student of semantics would do well to examine the changed meaning of the word upon which the reputations of millions of Americans hinge.

MERLE MILLER

One such attempt has now been made by Merle Miller. With a portrayal of the human foibles and anxieties posed by a single loyalty case, he has impaled some of the hysteria in the current loyalty program emanating from Executive Order 9835.

While Bradley Douglas is now strictly loyal to his country, by today's standards he was most disloyal a decade ago at the time when loyalty was unimportant. And on this score, several persons are out to get him. There is politically grasping Congressman Ed Jensen, who didn't like Brad's family; jealous Delbert Stevens, a fellow State Department employe who had to work his way through Brad's alma mater, and resentful Mr. Watterson, in charge of State Department security.

Storywise, Miller has set his hero in a swivel chair in the State Department and has imbued him with the personality traits all of us admire. It is hard to dislike a guy who reads The Washington Post editorials every morning. Besides, Brad Douglas is manly, good-looking, loved by women, including his former and current wife; kind, smart, not easily ruffled—like you and me.

A Real Commie

IT IS unfortunate, therefore, when the cards are stacked so carefully in his favor—vicious enemies and his own personable qualities—that Brad is found to be unworthy of the effort. Two thirds through the book he is exposed as a former member of the Communist Party. Attribute it to his youth or what you will, the fact remains that he was once outside the pale. If Brad had refrained from joining the CP and had only been a member of the Bookshop, the League for Peace and Democracy, or any of the Communist tinged or controlled organizations, we might have fought through with him.

How much more realistic, in terms of the current loyalty checks going on in Washington, it would have been to have made Brad a person who joined Communist-front organizations unwittingly because he believed they were working to spread personal freedom and democracy. How much more suspenseful to take a person being crucified by the doctrine of guilt by association and join him in his terror.

If our hero had been given an issue he could fight on moral grounds—whether he won or lost—many a reader would have been able to identify himself with Brad. If Brad had been given the works, as has happened to others, because his mother-in-law was a Communist; or because he parked his car in front of the Daily Worker headquarters one dark, misty night seven years ago; or because he ate dinner with a Negro; or because he owned some Paul Robeson records and Howard Fast books; or because his wife's maiden name was "Blah" and "there are thousands of 'Blahs' in New York and most of them are Reds"—that would have been a story.

By making his hero a former Commie, Miller has marred what might have been a significant tale. The issue today is how far we will go to prove a link between liberal organizations and the Communist Party.

Economist's Cross

ON ONE score, Miller has been most successful where past writers have failed. He has captured the "feel" of government. With skill he has caught the branch chief, the security officer, the Assistant Secretary, the former Government employe and the conscientious FBI agent.

Best of all, he has deftly described the frustrations of the Government economist—"He rarely saw the result of anything he did, because his recommendations and ideas passed through so many echelons that, by the time any given policy was formulated, his own contribution was scarcely ever recognizable."

The jacket announces that Mr. Miller has written a novel without a thesis. In reality he has attempted to write a novel with a thesis, but failed.

There still remains a need for a good novel on the loyalty program. Another author will have to embroil an ordinary Government employe—a non-CP member—in a loyalty investigation so that the readers will have a better understanding of what is actually going on behind the scenes today.

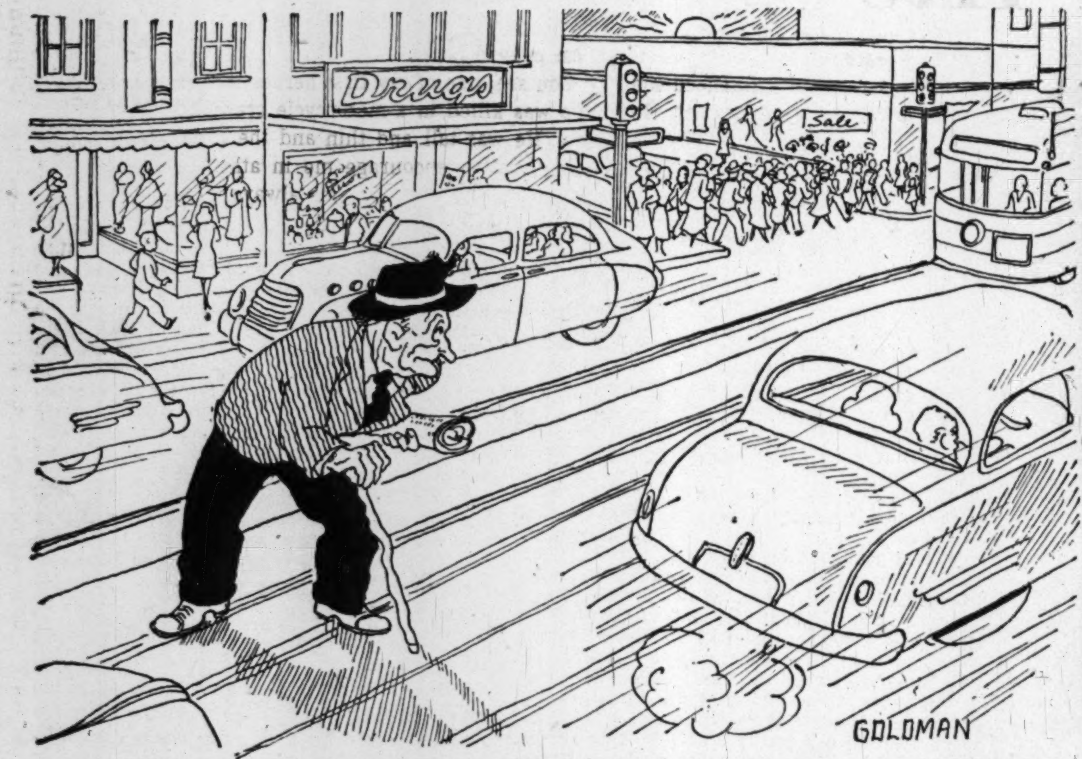
WASHINGTON AREA AFFAIRS

'3 E's' Gave Labyrinthine D. C. Its Safety Record . . .



An artist's conception of the composite traffic fatality. Of the 67 persons killed in 1948, 15 were pedestrians between the ages of 70 and 80; 22 of the pedestrians killed were crossing between crosswalks, and most of the fatalities occurred between 6 and 7 p. m.

A "major operation" in engineering has reduced the accident hazard at one of the city's busier intersections, New Jersey, Rhode Island and Florida aves. nw. The "channelization" is shown above. Automobiles converge from eight directions at this point

By Richard Morris
Post Reporter

THE best traffic safety record of any major American city is held by a metropolis that is now witnessing its greatest volume of traffic in history—350,000 vehicles on the streets every day.

Appropriately enough, that city is the Nation's Capital, where an auto travels the streets daily for every 2.5 persons who live within its limits.

"Natives" insist that Washington has one of the most practical and easily understood street systems in the Nation. Visitors, who often get lost in the twinkling of a traffic light, have been heard to contend it's more like a labyrinth than the simple "wagon-wheel" intended by Major L'Enfant.

Regardless of the arguments, the city's maze of criss-crossing streets, traffic circles, multicornered intersections and tricky turns make it a nervous driver's nightmare.

Then what's the gimmick, if Washington has the best safety record—and it has—of any city over 500,000 in population?

Year-By-Year Gain

LESS than 10 years ago, the District began promoting a progressive program of what George E. Keneipp, Director of Vehicles and Traffic, calls the "three E's of traffic safety": Enforcement, engineering and education.

The effects of expanded and revitalized traffic agencies have been felt, according to the record, every year since.

In 1948, there was an all-time low of 67 fatal traffic accidents in the District. The current year bids fair to break that record, for only 37 have occurred to date. That is three deaths more than half of the 1948 total, and 1949 is almost two thirds gone.

There is a wealth of technical terminology in traffic experts' files to explain the situation. It can be translated into the daily experiences of every person who ever crossed a street, rode a bicycle or drove a car.

Under the first of the "three E's"—enforcement—is the Metropolitan Police Traffic Division, headed by Capt. Loraine T. Johnson. Its job is to crack down on violators, a function which the public is most aware of, and to keep records of accidents while determining their cause and striving for their prevention.

Inspector Arthur E. Miller, inspector in charge of traffic enforcement, attributes much of the reduction in traffic accidents to increased activity by police officers in making arrests.

In September, 1948, for example, there were more arrests—14,512—than in any other month last year. And there were fewer accidents—984—than in any other month.

In contrast, February was the month when fewest arrests (10,878) were made in 1948. There were 1107 accidents on the books that month.

Like Homicide Squad

CLOSE on the heels of this phase of the work, in Miller's estimation, is the Accident Investigation Unit, established in 1940. It now has 39 regular uniformed men, three plainclothesmen and three hit-and-run investigators.

Members of this outfit, commanded by Lieut. William J. Liverman, can be found at the scene of any traffic accident that's at all serious.

"Our job is, first, to start at the beginning and investigate the cause of every accident and find means of preventing another," Liverman says. "Second, we are responsible for seeing that violators are prosecuted."

All men in the unit are trained in detective work, and their investigations of fatalities are not unlike those of homicide detectives.

Once at the scene, AIU men interview all persons involved in an accident, reconstruct the accident by use of pin-point measurements and diagrams, take statements from witnesses, photograph damage and jot down all statistical data available.

The type and location of the accident are posted in Traffic Headquarters on a map of the city, and a detailed "collision diagram" is made by a draftsman to be used in court. The AIU reports the information to traffic engineers, who try to devise means of preventing similar accidents in the future.

Supervisors in the Traffic Department review every record on every accident handled by AIU to see if possible violations have been overlooked by traffic or investigating officers.

An accident at Florida ave. and H st. ne. brought out the Accident Investigation Unit. The distance between point of impact and the curb is important, and Pvt. G. A. Young (back to camera) and Pvt. V. R. L. Locke stretch a tape measure. They comprise the crew of car No. 6

The three plain clothesmen in AIU investigated more than 1500 out-of-the-ordinary traffic accidents the first six months of this year.

"An accident death is just as serious as first degree murder, and we try to get on the trail while it's still hot," says Liverman, who was once a detective himself.

11,516 Permit Rejections

UNDERLYING this aspect of law enforcement is the District's stringent method of driver examination and licensing and its auto inspection program.

"While millions of dollars are spent each year on equipment, there has been too little attention to the one thing that can upset the whole system," says Director Keneipp.

"That's the man behind the wheel—is he fit to operate a vehicle, and is he fit to continue to operate one?"

The District issued 72,000 permits in 1940. Nearly 102,000 have been issued this year. Out of 75,000 examinations given this year, 11,516 were disapproved. There are now about 325,000 licensed vehicle operators in the District.

A close personal friend of Keneipp, a prominent business executive, was refused a permit recently because of faulty eyesight. He appealed to Keneipp, pleaded that he could drive perfectly well despite his 70-odd years, and asked that he be given special consideration. The answer was a kind, but firm, no.

An added safety precaution is the authority of the Board of License Revocation and Restoration, whose name is self-explanatory. Once a driver loses his permit, he must present a very convincing story to get it back.

If convicted of drunk driving, his permit is automatically revoked for six months. He's in the same position as an operator who never owned a permit when he comes back for reexamination. And he must convince the board he will go straight.

In the five years after its vehicle inspection program was begun in 1939, traffic deaths were reduced 22.4 per cent. In 1948, of 13,019 accidents, only 483 cases showed defective vehicles. The national average was about 10 per cent higher.

'Hot Lane' Barricades

THE second of the "three E's"—engineering—is probably less consciously recognized by the walking and riding public. But it is under this phase of traffic safety that a variety of pedestrian control measures has been devised to reduce hazards to the non-driving public.

Such contrivances as pedestrian barricades are set up—as at 14th and Irving sts. nw.—to keep pedestrians from crossing what traffic men call the "hot lane" of traffic at an "offset" intersection.

"Islands" and "turtlebacks" are familiar structures on wide avenues such as Pennsylvania, Connecticut and Massachusetts. Some islands serve the dual purpose of "channelizing" traffic into certain lanes to prevent congestion and of giving haven to pedestrians caught by a quick change of lights.

The latest system of channels to be completed is at 4th [illegible] Florida and Rhode Island aves nw. Such a "major engineering operation," as Keneipp calls the job, is performed only when the usual traffic control signals cannot serve the purpose. Traffic approaches that intersection from eight different directions.

Photographic equipment is carried in every AIU car, and the men know how to use it. Pvt. Young, again, is making a picture of one of the cars involved in the Florida ave. mishap

Another part of the long-range engineering program now under way is a plan to set up traffic lights on all four corners of intersections that have only two signals at present. Thus a driver's view of the light would not be blocked by a trailer-truck or bus in the same vicinity.

To promote night safety, engineers are now "reflectorizing" every traffic sign that is important during darkness.

But controls at intersections—where most accidents occur—are not curealls. In 1948, there were 440 intersections where five or more accidents took place. Only 34 of these had no controls of any kind.

Five 'Death Traps'

PROMINENT areas on Director Keneipp's traffic map, which spots every type of accident every day, are five intersections clogged with colored pins. They hold the 1949 "death trap" record so far, and include:

Bladensburg rd., 15th and H sts. ne., 37 accidents; Pennsylvania and Constitution aves. at 4th st. nw., 32 accidents; Independence and Maryland aves. at 4th st. sw., 28 accidents, and Logan Circle, nw., 25 accidents.

At Independence and Maryland aves., moreover, there is "every kind of device you need to prevent accidents," Keneipp says, but the volume of traffic is too great.

To overcome such obstacles, which in themselves defy solution, the Traffic Division has a continuing program of safety education.

The Police Department operates a school for traffic violators. "Students" assigned from the courts attend three classes in fundamentals of good driving. A separate traffic school is held at District Jail.

Keneipp says there is an ever-increasing registration of professional driving instructors for beginners. All must be licensed by the Department of Vehicles and Traffic.

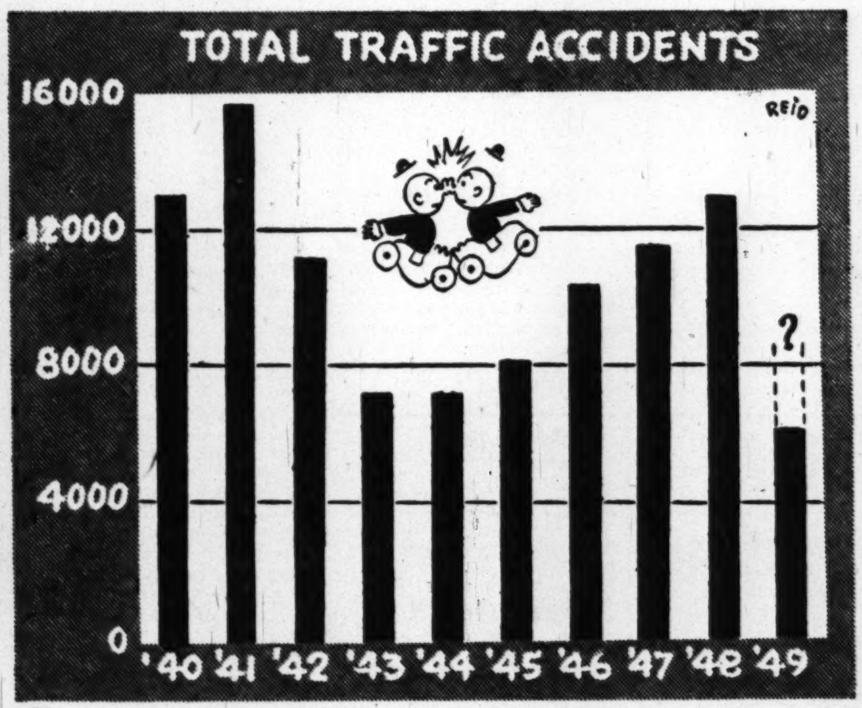
The Commissioner's Traffic Advisory Board and Keneipp's department collaborate on an enlightened public information program, while public, parochial and high schools have an aggressive program of safety education.

These few examples of what makes the wheels turn in a mammoth machine to protect the public are subordinate to two overall reasons for the District's good record, Keneipp believes.

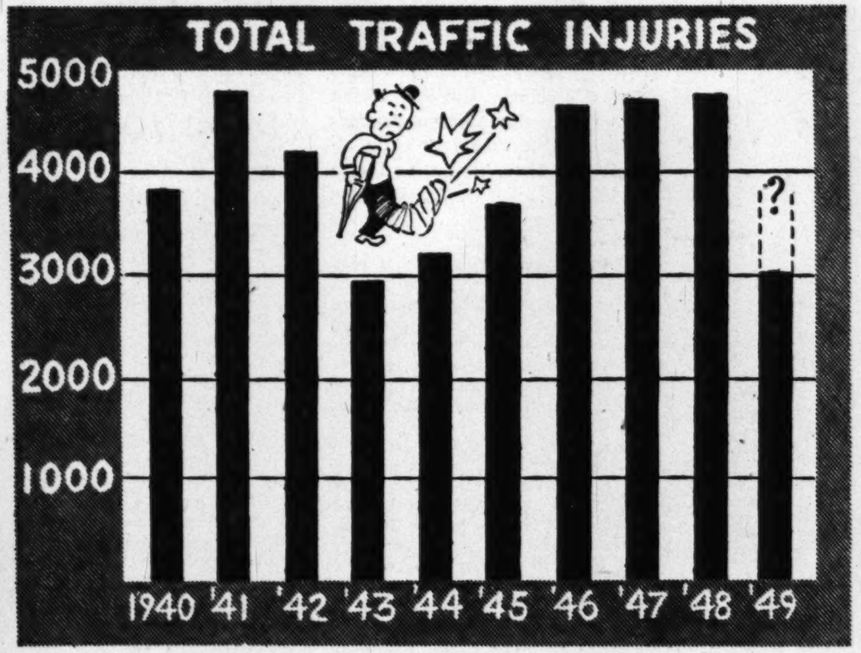
"1. There is perfect coordination, devoid of bickering and strife, between all departments of the District government concerned with traffic safety.

"2. There is widespread citizens' interest and cooperation."

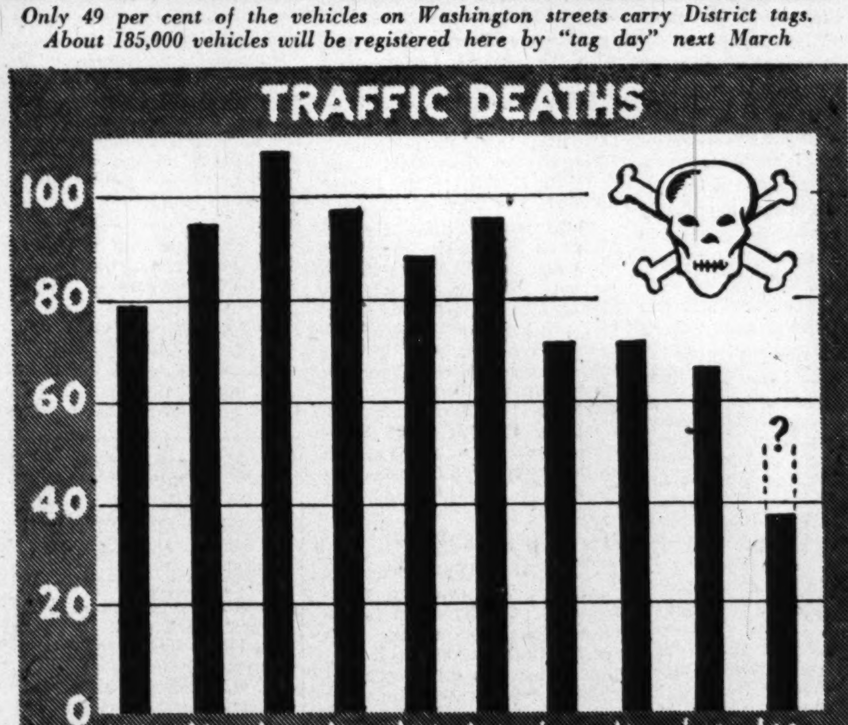
That's why the National Safety Council presented its grand award for all American cities to Washington, D. C. It was one of seven major awards that the city of 350,000 automobiles won in 1948.



The war years make a valley because of fewer cars on the streets. This year may be a safer one than 1940 despite much heavier traffic



Only 49 per cent of the vehicles on Washington streets carry District tags. About 185,000 vehicles will be registered here by "tag day" next March



Although traffic volume has increased steadily, the number of fatalities last year was the lowest in a decade—67. This year may be even better

Virginia Affairs

GOP Flexing Muscles for a Futile Fight

By Benjamin Muse
Publisher, the Manassas Messenger

VIRGINIA Republicans are presenting an interesting and attractive candidate for Governor in Walter Johnson, Commonwealth's Attorney of Northumberland County. Tyrrell Krum, of Fairfax County, Johnson's campaign manager, and Robert H. Woods, of Pearisburg, Republican State Chairman, are both able men, and they are launching their campaign like people who mean business.

But the odds are against any spectacular display of Republican strength in Virginia this year.

It is not that the stock of the Democratic Party in the State is exceptionally high. In fact, after the fierce intraparty struggle in the primary, and the flood of recriminations which accompanied it, the opposite might be said to be the case. But existing dissatisfaction is not of the kind to encourage either Democrat-to-Republican changeovers or any flocking of Republicans to the polls.

Miller Would Have Helped

IF Francis Pickens Miller had won the Democratic nomination, things would have been very different from a Republican point of view. If that had happened, the prospect for Republican gains would have been very bright.

Miller's nomination and election might well have marked the beginning of two-party competition in this State on the only healthy basis on which it can ever develop. With a liberal faction in control, the Virginia Democratic Party would have been brought into line with the national Democratic Party. By the same token the Virginia Republican Party would have had an opportunity to assume the traditional Republican role of a rallying point for conservatives.

But the nomination of Senator John S. Battle, standard-bearer of the ultraconservative Democratic "organization," left Virginia Republicans once more with nothing to shoot at.

An indeterminate, but obviously considerable, number of Republicans had actually moved into the Democratic primary to vote for Battle, and Henry A. Wise, "old warhorse" of the Virginia Republican Party and former national committeeman, had taken the astounding step of urging this procedure.

Last week, Republican gubernatorial candidate Johnson reversed the gesture and invited antimachine Democrats to vote Republican in the general election.

Conscience Only Guide

THE LEGAL aspects of this kind of trifling with the nature and purpose of party primaries have always been somewhat obscure in Virginia. They were further clouded by the opinion of Attorney General J. Lindsay Almond last year that Democrats might vote for Thurmond, Dewey or what-have-you in the presidential election and still vote in Democratic primaries. Almond's feeble and vacillating statements during the recent campaign made the confusion complete.

Apparently it is now every man to his own conscience. In practice, as far as any control by election officials is concerned, it is evident that voters may vote with little danger of interference in whichever primary they choose, regardless of previous party identification and regardless of their intentions in the general election.

The law stipulates that only Democrats shall vote in the Democratic primary, and it adds that that means a fellow who voted Democratic last time and will vote Democratic next time. There are many definitions of a Democrat, but one unassailable truth is that a Democrat is not a Republican.

Liberals Have a Stake

NEVERTHELESS, Wise's advice to Republicans to vote for Battle was ideologically sound. Johnson's call to antimachine Democrats is a very different matter. If principles of government enter into the picture at all, these liberal antimachine Democrats are the indicated opponents of the Republican Party.

Their natural habitat is within the Democratic Party, which they hope eventually to control. They pride themselves on having fought the Democratic fight in last year's national election, while many of Battle's associates "gave aid and comfort to the enemy."

The Republican primary experiment was a dismal failure, their unopposed candidate for Governor receiving only a paltry 8888 votes. The record-breaking vote in the Democratic primary, on the other hand, will itself militate against any Republican gains in the general election. The 316,612 Virginians who voted in the Democratic primary will have little to disturb them in any pronouncements which the Attorney General has made, but the vast majority of them will feel morally committed to vote for the Democratic nominee, if they vote at all, in November.

The Miller voters, and the supporters of Horace Edwards and Remmie Arnold, have no intention of turning Republican next November.

An Intraparty Balance

THE counterbalancing of liberal and conservative forces is now achieved in far more virile and effective form in the two opposing factions within the Democratic Party than between the Democratic Party itself and the Republican Party. The Virginia Republican Party has yet to find an ideologically useful role, and it certainly will not find it in offering itself as a haven for disgruntled liberals.

There is unquestionably a substantial number of Democratic voters in the Old Dominion, nevertheless, who in any Northern State, uninhibited by Reconstruction memories, would be staunch Republicans. It is only when it can at last absorb this conservative element that the Republican Party can ever hope to become an effective instrument of government in Virginia.

Jackie Robinson Tells His Own Story

By Jackie Robinson
(as Told to Ed Reid)
(First in a series of 10 articles)

I WANT to get one thing straight.

This was supposed to be a story about Jackie Robinson the Brooklyn Dodger baseball player. That's O.K. But what I'm going to try to tell you about is Jackie Robinson, the human being.

It's all right to get out on the ballfield and really rap them out, but I think what is important are the things that put me on that ballfield—the people I met early in life—the men and women—and the whole problem of being a Negro man in a white country.

Some one said this is a man's world. He should have said that it's a white man's world. Now don't get the idea that I'm going to tell you about my troubles. There were plenty of them, too. But I also had a lot of fun. That will be part of it.

So let's go back to the beginning, to Cairo, Ga., where I was born on January 31, 1919.

I don't remember much about that town but it must have been a terrible place for us to live because when I was 13 months old my mother packed bag and baggage and we moved to California. I never knew my father. He died before I was a year old. My uncle helped us out a lot and when we moved he came along to California because she wanted us to have the good things we didn't get down South.

We moved into a two-story house in the southern part of Pasadena. I can't remember the house too well, but I do remember this. It was very crowded. We slept two and three in a bed, but kids don't mind things like that too much. There were four kids besides myself.

Finally my uncle got a place of his own on Glorietta st. and we lived with him for a few years.

I think that one of the first people who influenced me was my brother, Edgar. His hobby was riding bicycles. He used to be a whiz on a bicycle. Once in a while we would go in a car to the beach and Edgar would start out at the same time. And there he'd be, ahead of us, when we got to the beach.

Despite his bicycle riding, Edgar was not much of an athlete that is, not like the rest of us. He was somewhat sickly sometimes, but what impressed me was his knowledge of the Bible. He knew it from cover to cover. But there was always something about him that was mysterious to me. Maybe it was the way he'd get angry once in a while and lose control of his temper. Something like the way I do.

But Edgar would always find something in the Bible that straightened him out. I am peeved with Edgar right now because he's got a broken leg from a bicycle fall. I guess I am peeved because I'm really worried about him.

You see, one of my first heroes was my brother, Frank, who was killed in a motorcycle crash. Frank would be 38 now. He was tall and thin and the girls liked him. Frank would always encourage me in athletics and was sort of like a father to me. He was always there to protect me when I was in a scrap, even though I don't think he could knock down a fly. He could never be forceably brutal and could talk ME out of any trouble. His fast talk got me out of many a difficulty.

From Glorietta st. my family moved to Pepper st. in 1923, and it was in Pepper st., where there was plenty of room, incidentally, for all of us kids, that my athletic career really got started.

My brother, Mac, had more to do with my athletic career than any one else. He'll always be a real hero with me. He

Coaltown Sets World Record

By Charles Chamberlain
Associated Press Sports Writer

Chicago, Aug. 20 (AP).—The Calumet Farm's mighty Coaltown streaked to a world's record of 1:34 for the mile today in winning the $32,250 Whirlaway Stakes at Washington Park.

This searing performance shattered the former record of 1:34 2/5 established by the great Equipoise at Arlington Park 17 years ago. It was equalled by Prevaricator last year at Golden Gate Fields near San Francisco.

Coaltown, in winning his eleventh victory in 12 starts this year, led his stablemate, Ponder, the Kentucky Derby winner, to the wire by two and one quarter lengths. Star Reward, only thoroughbred to defeat Coaltown this season, finished third with May Reward fourth and Colosal fifth and last.

The other two Calumet entries, Armed and Deluxe were scratched along with Delegate.

Coaltown, ridden by Jockey Steve Brooks, was loaded down with 130 pounds, compared to 128 pounds which Equipoise carried and 118 for Prevaricator in their record runs.

Not only did Coaltown clip two-fifths of a second off the record, but the 4-year-old son [illegible] Lea—Easy Lass, by Blenheim II, bettered all of both Equipoise's and Prevaricator's fractions for the mile.

The bay colt went the first quarter in :22 2-5, the second in :45 1-5, and the third in 1:08 3-5. Equipoise's mark which stood for 17 years was accomplished thusly: :23 1-5, :46, 1:09 1-5. Prevaricator's fractions were: :22 4-5, :45 3-5, and 1:09 3-5.

Because of the small, five horse field there was no place nor show betting. The Calumet Entry went to the post at 1 to 5 odds, paying $2.60 to win.

The triumph scored before a crowd of 23,259, raised him to fifteenth place in the list of leading money winners, just above Equipoise. His total earnings for two years of racing now is $341,975. He did not race as a 2-year-old due to a throat ailment. First money in the Whirlaway was $21,$400. Ponder picked up $6000 for second place, Star Reward got $3000 for third, and $1500 went to May Reward.

With Jockey Brooks hustling Coaltown out of the starting gate, the Calumet cannonball snatched the lead after the first two strides and never relinquished. May Reward broke first, but was quickly overhauled.

At the quarter, Coaltown was 1½ lengths ahead of May Reward. Colosal was a length further back and five lengths in front of Star Reward, while Ponder trailed by seven lengths.

As they hit the half mile Coaltown was only a length to the good, but at 6 furlongs he was 3 lengths ahead of May Reward. Ponder still was fifth and last.

In the stretch Coaltown was sailing along 4 lengths in front of Star Reward. Ponder had taken over fourth place and Colosal was last.

"I never hit him with the whip," Brooks said, "but that didn't make any difference. He probably was running just as fast as he'd go. Just showing the whip to him made him go a little faster. However, I still don't believe he's as good as Citation."

Baseball Broadcasts May Expand

By Bus Ham
Post Sports Editor

The airtight policies of organized baseball on broadcasting and televising may be opened up to allow more stations all over the country to participate in play-by-play accounts of games.

This action has been indicated in conferences between baseball representatives and the Justice Department.

Following complaints from numerous radio stations, the department has been investigating baseball's broadcast polices for two years.

All parties concerned now have gone far enough into the problem for an early showdown to be in sight.

A Matter of Consent

Target of most of the complaints in the hands of the Justice Department is the major leagues' rule which prohibits the broadcast or telecast of any major league game in any city without the consent of all league clubs in that city and within a distance of 50 miles.

Complainants contend this rule leads to a restraint of inter-State broadcasts and telecasts—and therefore a restraint of inter-State commerce and in violation of the anti-trust laws.

Organized ball insists that many and perhaps most minor league clubs would go out of business if maajor league games could be broadcast and telecast—especially telecast—in their home communities while they themselves were playing.

A specific example by baseball people on this point would be the fate of Newark in the International League, where attendance has fallen off almost fatally due principally to the telecast of games in New York.

Characteristic of the viewpoint of the complaining stations is that of WARL, Arlington, Va., one of the first to protest to the Justice Department.

"Take a look at our position," WARL Manager Raymond Baker said. "Washington's Nats are not

Bums Bow, 4-0, Tumble to 2d; Braves 3d

Boston, Aug. 20 (AP).—Lefthander Warren Spahn pitched his third shutout of the season tonight in guiding the Boston Braves to a 4-0 victory over the Brooklyn Dodgers who fell into second place in the National League, a full game behind the St. Louis Cardinals.

The victory put Boston in third place by a slight margin.

Spahn's victory was his fifteenth, as many as he won last year when the Braves battled their way to the pennant.

The Braves were limited to four hits, but they used them well.

Jimmy Russell doubled to left in the second, moved to third on an infield out and scored as a double play just missed.

A walk to Ed Stanky, a sacrifice by Elbie Fletcher and Al Dark's timely single to left tallied the second Boston run in the third inning.

Dark also came through with another timely single in the seventh after reliefer Rex Barney had loaded the bases by walking three of the Braves. Dark's second hit drove in Connie Ryan and Spahn.

Young Southpaw Strikes Out 31

York, Pa., Aug. 20 (AP).—Seventeen-year-old Gene Snyder's dreams of playing major league baseball some day may come true if his pitching performance last night is a sample of his hurling power.

The southpaw youngster struck out 31 players to give his York teammates a 4-to-1 victory in a 14-inning contest over the Nanticoke, Pa., team in the American Legion's Eastern Pennsylvania semiplayoff game.

Snyder pitched a no-hit game for eight innings.

Promising Grid Career Ended By Dellastatious' Death at 18

Death in the crash of his jeep yesterday ended the budding football career of 18-year-old Perry Dellastatious.

He had another year of eligibility at McKinley Tech High School where Coach Ed Solomon had reserved the regular quarterback spot for him.

He was elected president of the Circle T Club (athletic monogram club) last June, and was eyeing a football career at Clemson.

His buddy, Robert (Bugs) Thompson, who escaped injury in the crash, is a member of the Clemson team.

Solomon called the news of Dellastatious' death a "deep personal shock; Perry was one of the nicest kids I ever had the privilege to coach."

"He was a hustler, with lots of fight. He was a little guy, about 5 feet, 8 inches tall and about 150 pounds, but he was a fierce blocker and competitor.

"And what I admired most about Perry was his leadership. When the other boys were 'down,' Perry knew the right joke to crack and make them smile."

Perry was the third brother in

Except Transferred Players

How do Nats Take Losses? Philosophically in Most Cases

Best answer to today's burning question, "how are the Nats taking their losses?" is—nightly, daily and twice in doubleheaders.

Not in a long, long time—40 years to be exact—has a Washington baseball team compiled a record as wretched as the mark of this year's representatives.

If the team continues to lose at its present pace, it will probably, eclipse the horrible mark of the 1909 club which won only 43 out of its 154 games.

Obviously, the prospect of such futility isn't conducive to cherriness. On the other hand, the players haven't as yet developed the morbid spirit of an embalmer, nor are they likely to.

In the depths of their despair, they remember that even as Nats they play, travel, live and eat under the same major league conditions as the league-leading Yankees.

What, then, is their attitude, their reaction to defeat piled on defeat?

Generally speaking, it's philosophical. There are a few who genuinely grieve over each loss. There are others on the squad who go along with the current trend and joke about their misfortunes. Others are simply indifferent.

Take Sid Hudson, for instance. "What's the use of worrying yourself to death about it?" he asks. "You go out and do your best and what happens simply happens.

"We are all trying just as hard today as we were when we were winning, but we just can't win. Can't get a break."

Coach Clyde Milan, who's been around for almost 40 years, simply clams up—about baseball—after each defeat. Prefers to talk about his native Texas, oil wells and other disconnected topics.

Al Kozar, Clyde Vollmer, Sam Mele and Eddie Yost are the silent type. By them you couldn't tell whether the club had won or not.

Sam Dente, on the other hand, is explosive. He rants and rages and fumes. You'd think he'd be indoctrinated to defeat after doing a year's stretch with the St. Louis Browns, but he isn't.

"It tears my heart out to lose," he answers.

For Eddie Robinson it's been a nightmarish experience, even though he's enjoying his best season in the majors. This time last season he was with the Cleveland Indians, in the middle of the pennant fight which the Tribe won. Today he's saddled with a seventh-place team.

"This is hell," he says, with no apologies to General Sherman who had the same idea. "I

Bosox Top Nats Twice, Gain ½ Game on Yanks

Griffs Bow, 7-1, After 8-4 Replay Loss

By Morris Siegel
Post Reporter

Boston finished a victory it started 44 days ago against the Nats and followed it up with a second triumph which was conceived and completed all in the same afternoon.

Item No. 1 was disposed of in three innings. It was the incompleted part of a July 7 game which was ordered finished. The game was halted at the end of six innings to permit the Red Sox to board an 11 o'clock train.

When curfew tolled, the score was 8-3, Boston. When the game was officially placed in the record books yesterday, it was 8-4, still Boston.

In the routine portion of the day's program, the Nats took a 7-1 pasting to extend their losing streak to 10 in a row, only one less than their previous season's high, which they'll have a chance to equal this afternoon.

Bosox Gain On Yanks

The postponed victory coupled with the swifter triumph narrowed New York's first place lead over Boston to 3½ games. The Nats also made progress. While they were losing, the Browns were harpooning the Detroit Tigers and now the Nats are only one game out of the dungeon.

Skinny Mel Parnell was the story of Boston's 7-1 triumph. The young lefthander restricted the Nats to five singles in scoring his 19th success of the season, highest in both leagues.

And while on the subject of reciting the uninspiring figures about the Nat misfortunes, here's the rest of 'em which yesterday's loss made possible.

Washington has now lost 33 out of its last 37, and 10 in a row to the Red Sox. Dealing in personalities, the lacing was the eleventh straight for Pitcher Paul Calvert and his fourteenth of the year.

An unearned run in the sixth inning foiled Parnell's attempt for a shutout. The Red Sox also made an unearned run, but their other six tallies were strictly legitimate.

First Baseman Billy Goodman, whose error paved the way for the Nats' lone score, got only one of Boston's eight hits, but he batted in three runs. He knocked in two with outfield flies and paddled the other across with a single.

There were a couple of triples and a double thrown into Boston's eight-hit attack and none of the extra base hits was wasted.

For the benefit of the 9021 patrons, Boston asserted its power in the second when Bobby Doerr

See NATS, Page C-2, Column 7.

Delayed Loss Won't Add to Loss Streak

As a consoling gesture to Washington's harried Nats, American League President Will Harridge has decreed that Washington's delayed 8-4 defeat in the game started July 7 with the Red Sox, and finished yesterday before the regularly scheduled game, should not be counted as a part of the Nats' current losing streak.

So for the record, the streak is now 10 losses in a row, instead of 11.

8 Fans Arrested In Row Over Ball

Pittsburgh, Aug. 20 (AP).—Eight baseball fans, including five brothers, were arrested on charges of inciting to riot today during the Pittsburgh-St. Louis ball game.

Police said the trouble started near the third-base stand after a fan had taken two baseballs from the pockets of an usher. The game was interrupted for two minutes in the seventh as the usher attempted to retrieve the balls.

Several officers hustled off the eight fans to a nearby police station.

Ted Wants McCarthy To Tell Him, 'You're Best I've Managed'

By The Associated Press

Know what Ted William's life's ambition is?

The Boston slugger's big desire is to hear Red Sox Manager Joe McCarthy say that he is "the greatest player he has ever managed." Originally Williams made that declaration in Sarasota, Fla., on March 1, 1948, when Marse Joe became pilot of the Bosox.

"That's still my life ambition today," said Ted yesterday with a smile.

Cards Beat Pirates, 7-3, Lead by Game

Pittsburgh, Aug. 20 (AP).—Lou Klein's ninth-inning double scored Glenn Nelson and gave the St. Louis Cardinals a 4-3 win over the Pittsburgh Pirates today.

The victory put the Cards a full game ahead of the Brooklyn Dodgers who lost to the Boston Braves, 4-0.

Howie Pollett, who relieved George Munger in the sixth, won his sixteenth game of the season, as against seven losses. Harry Gumbert was the loser.

The Bucs scored a run in the first, but the Red Birds ganged up on Ernie Bonham in the second, got four hits and made three of them good.

When Bonham gave another hit at the start of the third, he was relieved by little Vic Lombardi.

The Buccos scored another run in the fourth and knotted the count in the fifth. The score remained even-steven till the Cards made their last-ditch stand

Tom Saffell got four hits out of five times at bat but only scored on one of them—a three-bagger in the fourth.

The winning run in the ninth followed Nelson's single with one out. Joe Garagiola's walk moved him to second and Klein's two-bagger carried him on in.

New York's Homers Beat Macks, 7-3

New York, Aug. 20 (AP).—Two home runs by Gene Woodling and one by Phil Rizzuto plus four errors enabled the New York Yankees to defeat the Philadelphia Athletics, 7-3, today.

Woodling opened the scoring with an inside-the-park home run in the first inning. The Yanks added two more in the fourth with the aid of three errors.

The Yanks clinched the game in the fifth when Woodling cracked his second homer with two mates aboard. Tod Davis' second error of the game enabled Woodling to come to bat in the fifth. Davis is filling in at short for the absent Eddie Joost.

Rizzuto completed the Yankee scoring by leading off the seventh with his fifth home run of the season.

Lefty Ed Lopat had the A's blanked on six singles going into the ninth inning when an error by Bobby Brown with two down paved the way for three Athletic runs.

Sixth Row for Lopat

The triumph was Lopat's sixth straight and twelfth of the season. A ladies' day crowd of 66,912 fans turned out including 39,851 paid.

Despite the triumph the Yank's American League lead was shaved to 3½ games over the Boston Red Sox, who beat Washington twice.

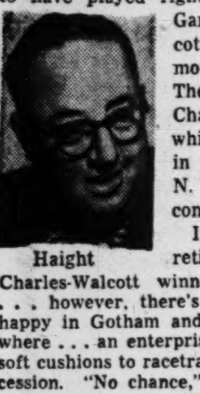
—Will Louis Fight Again?—

It Seems Garden Has Lock on Heavy Title

By Walter Haight
Post Reporter



Haight

DID THE NATIONAL BOXING ASSOCIATION get sucked in? Certainly looks that way as far as the heavyweight championship is concerned. Under the present setup the NBA appears to have played right into the hands of the Madison Square Garden. The NBA sanctioned the Charles-Walcott mess for the crown. Charles won and then moved into New York to beat Gus Lesnevich. The N. Y. Commission has yet to recognize Charles as the champ. However, when it does, which can't be long now, Charles will be right in the Garden and New York clutches. Thus N. Y., outside of the NBA realm, once more will control the title, through Joe Louis and Co.

It was Louis' whisper that he was going to retire that caused the NBA to recognize the Charles-Walcott winner instead of conducting an elimination . . . however, there's talk to the effect that Louis may not be happy in Gotham and will come out of retirement to fight elsewhere . . . an enterprising young man hit upon the idea of renting soft cushions to racetrack fans and asked a track owner for the concession. "No chance," replied the official. "If we make the customers too comfortable they won't get up and bet." . . . despite rumors to the contrary nobody ghost-writes any part of Ralph Murdock's excellent Fishing Column. Ralph is simply master of the outdoor sport subject and has a style all his own. However, he is the only columnist I know who writes his stuff in longhand . . . I was talking to a race horse owner the other day about the expenses of keeping a thoroughbred in action. He brought out that there are many expenses in addition to the actual training for instance: medical care, shoeing, etc. "I have an old horse who has been handled by five different trainers," he said. "I checked my training bills recently and discovered this horse has had 94 teeth pulled! I looked in his mouth and darned if I could see a cavity." . . . on a recent trip to Wheeling, W. Va., I was invited to a fish dinner and expected to eat brook trout or Ohio River catfish. Imagine my surprise when we feasted on a 38-pound baked rockfish (striped bass) caught by Howard Meagle of Radio Station WWVA while vacationing at Cape Cod. He said 54 pounds was the record for the year, the monster being caught surf casting. Boating rockfish of that size is illegal in Chesapeake Bay where the limit is 15 pounds. Meagle was called on for a speech but before he began a pasteboard contraption was placed on his hands, forcing him to keep them about a foot apart. The gadget, designed for fish-story tellers, bore a sign "Whopper Stopper."

DIDN'T BABE RUTH AND LOU GEHRIG once beat up a guy who is now getting national publicity when they caught him in a rather embarassing situation in the Yankees' dressing room? . . . any doubt about running horses being unable to become acclimated to night racing should be erased by the fact that thoroughbreds have shown ability to become accustomed to almost anything. When the starting stalls replaced the old barrier, many horses couldn't be dragged into the gate. However, it wasn't long before most of them went in quietly. Now that several generations have come to the races, a horse allergic to the electric gate is a rarity. Some of the final races in the fall are run almost in darkness with the lights turned on at the finish as an aid to the finish photo. I've never heard of it affecting a finish. Then we must remember that, despite inferior lighting, night racing thrived in Baltimore and elsewhere early in the century . . . Ray Haight, the turf announcer, is supporting a big, new car and, if his old man is a good boy, he has promised to let him press one of the buttons that raise and lower the windows . . . Lincoln Plaut, long a head man in the Daily Racing Form family, has resigned and is reported weighing two jobs—general manager of Churchill (Kentucky Derby) Downs and editor of the Horsemen's Benevolent and Protective Association's publication . . . isn't there another sports angle to this "five per cent" business up on Capitol Hill? Wouldn't surprise me . . . citrus fruit growers have been trying for years to develop a sweet lemon. The Cleveland Indians have, beat them to it with their crack hurler, Bob Lemon . . .

THE WHEELING DOWNS TRACK which advertises itself as the "most beautiful half-mile track in the nation" is just that, in my book. And it is kept as clean as a Dutch housewife's kitchen. Among other innovations it has a stewards' stand that is used by hydraulic action similar to that used in oiling and greasing autos. Puts the stewards "up in the air" . . . Did the heavy use of Dick Todd on defense lead to his decision to quit the Redskins this season? . . . looks as if we may be a bit inconsistent. Aren't we frowning on German fighters performing in this country while we let the Jap swimmers have freedom of competition? . . . Baltimore will have a new trotting track on Route No. 40, six miles out of town, next year. The Maryland Racing Commission will give the Okay any day now . . . by the way, George P. Mahoney, former chief of the racing commission, is being petitioned to run for governor of Maryland in the next election. His friends say he will be elected, too . . . what bigtime radio sports commentator pays his ace writer a few peanuts a week for the stuff that makes him famous? If Washington boxing fans don't turn out for the Jimmy Cooper-Manuel Ortiz fight at Griffith Stadium August 29, Congress should repeal the District boxing law. The match looks that good on paper . . . Top Man Eddie O'Hara promises to have the Marlboro racing plant shipshape for the opening of the meeting September 12. Everything is new there except the pine trees at the far turn . . . whatever became of that permanent line-up the Nats announced several weeks ago?

Three Veterans Share Lead in Vandalia Shoot

Vandalia, Ohio, Aug. 20 (AP).—Heavy wind swept across the amateur trapshooting association's home grounders today, holding down scores in preliminary events to Monday's opening of the Golden Grand American trapshoot.

Three shooters who held the national doubles championship seven times in the last 14 years dominated a 50-pair event which attracted 131 entrants.

Joe Hiestand, the Hillsboro, Ohio, farmer who won the national doubles crown in 1935 and 1936, captured the top prize today with a score of 96 of 100. Tied for second in the doubles with 93 were Rudy Etchen of Los Angeles, the 1942, 1943 and 1945 national doubles champion, and Mercer Tennille of Shreveport, La.,

12 Players Go to Bat in Big Inning

Philadelphia, Aug. 20 (AP).—The Philadelphia Phillies exploded for seven runs in the seventh inning today and went on to trounce the New York Giants, 9-3.

Until the "lucky" seventh the Phils managed to solve Lefty Monty Kennedy for only three singles. The Phils sent 12 men to bat in the seventh against Kennedy and relief pitchers Kirby Higbe and Clint Hartung.

Five singles, three walks, two errors and a wild pitch did the damage.

The Phils completed the scoring in the eighth when Del Ennis belted a two-run homer, his nineteenth of the season.

Russ Meyer, who bowed out for a pinch-hitter during the Phils' big rally, received credit for the victory, his ninth of the year.

Reds Beat Cubs, 7-4, On Lowrey's Double

Cincinnati, Aug. 20 (AP).—History did a quick repeat today as Harry (Peanuts) Lowrey's eighth inning double, his third two-bagger of the game, drove in three runs to give the Cincinnati Reds a 7-4 victory over the Chicago Cubs.

The Cubs won by the same score last night with a five-run outburst in the ninth inning.

Each team used three pitchers in the wild contest in which Cincinnati outhit Chicago 16-9. The win went to Ewell Blackwell, the second of the Redleg trio.

The Reds led 3-0 before the Cubs managed a run in the fifth. Cincinnati got another in the same inning and Chicago countered with two in the seventh to tie the score.

Aboard when Lowrey socked his game winning double were Johnny Wyrostek and Ted Kluszewski, who had walked, and Harry Walker, who singled in a pinch role.

—Let's Make Sammy Run—

Local Poet Cries and Cries But on Third Sam Dente Dies

Ann Nelson, of 6520 2nd st. nw., chides us for calling the Nats "sad sacks" and to show how she really feels about the Griffs she forwards the following poem:

The Nats had had their time at bat
Of runs there was no trace,
And Arch announced, as usual,

Oh, he hits and hits and hits again;
It is a bitter case;
Other runners cross the plate.

How can they do it to him?
How can eight men have the face
With monotonous regularity
To leave Sammy there on base?

Kuhel's heart is heavy.
We're so far down in the race;
Still he lets our Sam go sixth to bat
And leaves him there on base.

Oh, when it comes to hitting
Our shortstop sets the pace;
And each loyal fan weeps with him
That he's always left on base.

Washington's "5-percenters" are getting no sympathy from the Boxing Managers Guild, which looks down on anyone who doesn't charge at least 33 1/3 per cent for services . . . Maryland's decision to use the two-platoon system is actually a reduction in the number of teams the Terps employed last year when they had an offensive unit, a defensive unit, a team to kick extra points and a fourth to defend against extra points . . . Split-T Tatum has it figured out where 77 players are the least he can get by on with a two-platoon system . . . "It takes three players for each offensive position, three for each defensive position, and 11 substitutes," he explains.

College football coaches who think the four-man line is the answer to the T-formation are reminded that Georgia Tech first used the latest defensive wrinkle against Notre Dame several years ago and was trounced, 65 to 0 . . . Practically every time Ted Williams draws a base on balls, the Red Sox managed to convert it into a run. Williams has drawn 121 passes this season and scored 118 runs . . . Of all the dubious records the Nats are compiling, remember this: the 9-game winning streak they ran up in May is still the highest in the majors this year . . . Oscar Vitt, former Cleveland manager who visited with the Nats in New York last week, says his foremost achievement as a player was "being hit in the head by a Walter Johnson fast ball and being able to tell the story" . . .

Browns Trip Tigers With 5-Run 8th, 5-1

St. Louis, Aug. 20 (AP).—Trailing 1-0 after a fast-played seven and a half innings, the St. Louis Browns ganged up on Virgil Trucks in the eighth frame for five runs on two triples, a double and a homer to defeat the Detroit Tigers, 5 to 1, today.

Pat Mullin scored the lone Tiger Tally in the sixth with a home run.

Bob Dillinger started the ball going with a triple. Stan Spence singled him home. Then Graham put the Brownies in front with his 19th four-bagger of the season. Roy Sievers singled and scored on Sherman Lollar's second double of the contest.

Harold White was called in to pitch and Johnny Sullivan greeted him with a triple, scoring Lollar.

Nats Are Philosophical

don't know what got into this club. We're better than the record shows—much better but we just don't seem to be able to buy a win."

Only those players who have experienced the thrill of playing for a championship or a first-division team appear to be shocked over the plight of their present association.

The others have been nurtured on defeat so long that they're used to it. Most of them have spent their entire major league lives with losing Washington teams, although defeat never before came to them in such overwhelming measure as this season.

These are the Hudsons, Earlys, Evans, Scarboroughs, Lewises and Coans. They've inherited a defeatist complex and it's doubtful if they'd be able to adjust themselves to an extended period of prosperity.

Certainly, they haven't been exposed to it as Nats.

Navy Booters Open Season at Gettysburg Oct. 1

Annapolis, Md., Aug. 20 (AP)—Navy booters will open their campaign for the Eastern intercollegiate soccer title Oct. 1 against Gettysburg College.

Athletic Director H. H. Caldwell today announced a tough 11-game schedule which includes Penn, the defending champion, and other squads which constitute the cream of the East. The Midshipmen were second in the league last year, winning nine games, tying Cornell and losing only to Penn.

The varsity soccer schedule: October 1, Gettysburg; 8, Brown at Providence, R. I.; 12, University of North Carolina; 15, University of Pennsylvania; 19, Princeton at Princeton; 22, Penn State; 26, Haverford; 29, Harvard; November 5, Yale at New Haven, Conn.; 12, Swarthmore; 19, Army.

led off with a triple. Goodman's fly to left scored him to make it 1-0.

Two runs trickled across in the third. Ted Williams, on first with one of his three walks, scored on Vern Stephens' double. Stephens himself scored after Doerr's sacrifice and Goodman's second straight run producing fly.

The Bostonians dribbled in single runs in the sixth, seventh, eighth and ninth to swell their total to seven.

The last was at the expense of Dick Welteroth who kept Al Zarilla's nine-game batting streak alive by pitching him a triple.

Williams' fly drove the run in. An error by Goodman on Yost and singles by Sherry Robertson and Buddy Lewis produced Washington's only run.

IN SHORT.—Pitching loss in the three-inning skirmish was charged to Mickey Haefner, who was fired for 'indifference" in the first inning of the same game . . . Chuck Stobbs was Boston's original pitcher, but Joe Dobson hurled the last three innings yesterday, yielding five hits, but only one run. Eddie Stewart's triple and Clyde Vollmer's single accounted for the eighth-inning run . . . Sid Hudson (7-11) and Jack Kramer (3-6) finish out the series today . . ."

Tatum Helps Six Schools Field Teams

HIGH SCHOOL football, never before attempted in Prince Georges County, Md., becomes a reality September 1, and the University of Maryland coaches and athletic staff can take a bow because of it.

Largely through the efforts of Head Coach Jim Tatum and his staff, six high schools which encircle Maryland University, will field football teams for the first time. Newcomers to the football world are Laurel, Mount Rainier, Bladensburg, Maryland Park, Hyattsville and Greenbelt.

They'll play a round robin schedule of 18 games, all in Maryland's Byrd Stadium, and if, in the near future, the schools' stars decided to enroll at the State university, you can't blame them.

Maryland not only supplied the impetus for the PG County League, but it also conducted a clinic which served as a refresher course for coaches of the six schools.

The clinic wasn't restricted to PG County League coaches, but was open to high and prep coaches in Maryland and the District. Sixty-five coaches and officials attended the three-day sessions, which featured lectures and demonstrations by the Maryland football coaching staff.

Instructors at each of the high schools will head up the football coaching staffs. The following have been named as head coaches: Jack Zeldin, New York University, Greenbelt High; Charles Futrell, North Carolina University, Laurel High; Dan Palumbo, Arnold College, Hyattsville High, and three former University of Maryland athletes, Joe Murphy, Mearle DuVall and Charles Hudson, for Mount Rainier, Bladensburg and Maryland Park, respectively.

"The introduction of football into our county high schools is a real stepping stone in building athletic competition and expanding the physical program of the county youth," said Vincent Holochwost, county superintendent of physical education.

Coaches attending the Maryland clinic:

M. D. DuVall, Bladensburg High School; A. Biscontine, Bladensburg High School; C. L. Hudson, Maryland Park High School; W. N. Scott, Maryland Park High School; T. C. Ferguson, State Department of Education; James G. McCallister, Amateur Athletic Union; C. R. Gamper, Gilman High School; John G. Devine, Bladensburg High School; Walter W. Welc, Bell Vocational High School; N. S. Wetherhold, Annapolis High School; J. M. Murphy, Mount Rainier High School; Fred Mulvey, Western High School; Mort Irwin, Western High School; Robert Fuller, McDonogh School; F. Maisel, McDonogh School; Ray Fehrman, Bethesda-Chevy Chase High School; Daniel A. Palumbo, Hyattsville High School; Vincent Holochwost, County supervisor of physical education; Charles Futrell, Laurel High School; Roy Doolittle, Greenbelt High School; Pete Labukas, Harry Hughes, Bladensburg High School; Robert Bickford, Bucky Loomis.

W. R. Mentzer, Eastern High School; C. Berry, Wicomico High School; G. Eichnor, Wicomico High School; R. Cathell, Wicomico High School; F. W. Powars, Chamberlain Vocational; J. G. Pillman, Indiana University; B. G. Hooper, University of Maryland; L. K. Lassohn, University of Maryland; C. L. Norris, Baltimore City College; Paul Massey, Charlotte Hall School; O. Rowley Baker, St. Paul School, Baltimore.

Bunker Hill Holds Tryouts

Tryouts for next year's Bunker Hill American Legion baseball team will be conducted Tuesday and Thursday at 4:30 p. m. on the Armory Field.

All boys in the Eastern High School area who have not reached their seventeenth birthday by January 1, 1950, are eligible for the team.

D. C. Stadium Action Put Off

Administration support for a proposed $2,500,000 Washington stadium to seat 60,000 to 75,000 was made known yesterday.

The proposal, dropped in the legislative hopper last April by Representative Harris (D., Ark.) will get a hearing before Harris' Judiciary Subcommittee of the District Committee but probably not until January, he said yesterday.

Harley Hise, chairman of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, which would have to buy $500,000 worth of stadium bonds under the Harris bill, said the preliminary expenses of the proposed Memorial Stadium Commission should be paid either by a Treasury loan or a direct grant. He also wanted to make sure any such bond issue would be subject to prior RFC approval.

Army Secretary Gordon Gray reported the head of the military academy at West Point objected to a clause in the bill ordering Army and Navy to play at least one game a year in the new stadium.

Robinson Tells His Own Story

had a heart condition, but he always believed in his ability to overcome it, and he did. He was really an athlete. Mac went to Muir Technical High School in Pasadena, and in his final term he got in a track meet and wowed every one, including himself.

HE WON every sprint event and went on to Pasadena Junior College. I remember going to track meets with him and watching him run and listening to the crowd yell. Sometimes when the crowd yells at Ebbets Field I think they are really cheering for Mac, because without him and his encouragement I don't think there would ever have been a Jackie Robinson, baseball player.

Mac got so good that he was sent to Berlin in 1936 and he ran second to Jesse Owens in most of the sprint events. I remember that I was still in Muir Tech at the time. Mac held the world's record in the 200-meter race, then Jesse Owens broke it after a week.

Mac was also tops in the running broad jump. When I finally got into Pasadena Junior College I became interested in the running broad jump and could do a little over 23 feet. Mac's best was a little over 25 feet.

I remember that it was because of an incident involving Mac that I really grew up and came to realize what kind of a world I was living in. It wasn't much bigger than the baseball I happened to be holding in my hand at the time. It suddenly got much larger than that.

I remember that in the city of Pasadena there were a number of swimming pools. One day in the week was allotted to Negroes. During hot spells you waited around for that day, and when you couldn't go in the water you stood outside the picket fence and watched the white kids splash around. I honestly thought the officials didn't think Negroes got as warm and uncomfortable as white people during the Pasadena heat.

I REMEMBER that Mac used to be employed by the city to teach youngsters to swim in the pools. Mac was proud of his job and proud of the city of Pasadena. He wanted to put it on the map, and he certainly did later through his good job at the Olympic Games.

One day a faction outside the city government which thought there should be no discrimination against Negroes decided to do something about it. They tested the city's discrimination ruling in court in 1936 and the court ruled that Negroes could swim in the pools any time they wanted to.

The angry City Manager then proceeded to fire every colored fellow who had been hired. Mac was one of these. He was away at the Olympics when it happened and came back to find that he had no job waiting for him.

I think it broke his spirit. Mac lost his wife, Grace, a little while after and that soured him on life completely, I guess. I sort of look back at my brother's experience every once in a while and resolve to make the best of things.

I would advise anybody who is being discriminated against to sort of ride with the punch until his chance comes to strike back and then strike hard to straighten the matter out.

MY FAVORITE relative was my sister, Willa-Mae, who was sort of sorry that she wasn't a boy because she liked athletics so much. There was only a couple of years difference between us so you could say that we grew up together.

When I was 8 years old and she was 10, you would think she was 100 the way she talked to me when everything was blue. There was many a time when there wasn't a scrap of food in the house.

My mother, of course, would be out working at her job as a domestic and Willa-Mae and I would stay home and console each other. We were both going to Cleveland Elementary School in Pasadena at the time. The depression had just camped on everybody's door. I'll never forget two teachers at school who sensed the trouble we were in.

My mother would always, when she had enough food, pack us a lunch to eat at school. Sometimes when there was nothing to eat and she had no money to buy food, we would have to go off to school empty-handed. I could never get my belt tight enough to keep that hurt in my stomach away. I felt sorry for Willa-Mae who had no belt at all and must have been even hungrier than I was.

We would walk along to school carrying our books and wondering whether our ma would make enough money that day to feed us at night. I'll say this for Willa-Mae. She moaned about it a lot less than I did, but I was two years younger and felt I had a right to complain.

WE would get to school so hungry we could hardly stand up, much less think about our lessons. Then our teachers, Miss Gilbert, in Kindergarten, and Miss Haney, in first grade, always had a kind word for us—and a couple of sandwiches. I have never tasted any better, even when Mr. Rickey sends the team out West on the Twentieth Century Limited.

A sandwich here and there helped my sister and I to keep going. Gradually things got better—to the point where we generally always had lunch—and I became concerned with school athletics.

When I was in the third grade we got a soccer team together that was so good we challenged the sixth grade team and beat them. After that we represented the school in matches. I was one of the forwards, but I can't even remember the rules of the game any more.

There was not more than two or three Negro families in the Pasadena district we lived in, but we had no real trouble with discrimination—no regular trouble that is.

I always thought Pasadena was a great place, until I got more experience in life. Now I realize there is a lot of prejudice there. But it is accomplished in an underhand way—the worse kind of bigotry.

I don't mean to say that you can grade bigotry the way you grade milk, but at least in most places you know where you stand. In Pasadena it was always hard for Negro fellows to find work.

They didn't tell why you weren't getting the job—but you generally guessed it. They are intolerant in lots of other ways—but I suppose that is the story in many cities, even up north.

I know one thing, that prejudice against colored people is gradually breaking down in even the most intolerant cities. It's only a little bit here and there, but gradually it is going and that is good.

I'll never forget my first personal experience with bigotry of the meanest sort. It happened the first year after I got out of high school. The fellows on Pepper st. decided to organize a soft-ball team. We were coming back from a game just outside the city limits and had almost reached home again in a jaloppy I owned when I stopped to drop off a member of the team.

A white man came around the corner in another car and had to stop right behind us. He leaned out of the car and cussed us out, but good. We had an argument and the other driver was slapped by one of the fellows in my car. Then this fellow looked around and found that there were about 100 people watching the argument.

HE turned pale and backed away, saying that he didn't want to fight or even start anything in this neighborhood. Most of the people in the crowd were colored. He offered to fight any one of us in a sporting club on the other side of town. We saw that he was really worried and regretted starting the argument, so we started to get back in my car.

Then all of a sudden there was the whine of a siren and a motorcycle cop wobbled his machine through the crowd. He was shouting and swearing and started to put my friends under arrest.

So great was the crowd by this time, though, that as fast as he'd arrest one fellow the fellow would disappear in the mob. He must have arrested 10 fellows and they all managed to duck away from him.

He got really angry then and also very nervous, and all of a sudden he pulled out his revolver and began waving it around, yelling and bellowing. The crowd began to pull away from us and after a few seconds I found myself up against the side of my car with a gunbarrel pressed unsteadily into the pit of my stomach.

I was scared to death.

Turnesa Only Yank Defeated

By Gayle Talgot

Mamaroneck, N. Y., Aug. 20 (AP). Great Britain's well-laid plans for reclaiming the Walker Cup were buried today under an avalanche of American pars and birdies on Winged Foot's sunny fairways.

The "best team Britain ever put together" went down by a total score of 10-2 as it managed to salvage only one victory in today's eight concluding singles matches. The one-sided triumph was America's eleventh in the 12 times the amateur event has been played since 1922.

The two-day international test of skill between the two great golf-playing nations saw only one of the invaders, a balding young Englishman named Ronnie White, stand up against the ruthless efficiency of this country's sharpshooters. But for him, it would have been a complete rout.

White gave the visitors their only singles victory today as he shot close to par golf in trouncing our amateur king, Little Willie Turnesa, 4 and 3. He and his partner, Joe Carr of Ireland, gave Britain its other winning point by defeating Turnesa and Ray Bellows in yesterday's Scotch foursomes.

Revenge for Stranahan

Frank Stranahan gained sweet revenge by trouncing Bluff Max McCready of Ireland—the same man who defeated the Toledo Adonis in the last British amateur—6 and 5. Frank didn't permit the British champion to win a single hole in the last 16.

Skee Riegel, hot as a rocket all day, shellacked Big Jim Bruen of Ireland, 5 and 4. The dapper Oklahoman was one under par for the 32 holes it took him to do it.

Johnny Dawson, 46-year-old dean of the American corps, got tired toward the last, but won four of his last six holes to defeat Joe Carr, another Irishman, 5 and 3.

With these three on the right side of the ledger, Jim McHale of Philadelphia gained the distinction of supplying the clincher by shutting off Gerald Micklem of the British side, 5 and 4. That gave the homebreds a total of seven wins and made certain they would keep the big cup—though the distinction was transitory.

Within a matter of minutes, Charlie Coe, a lanky son of Oklahoma, had made the victory double certain by winning from Cecil Ewing, 1 up, on the final green

Ray Billows, seasoned runner-upper to the American title, finally subdued Ken Thom, a muscular Briton, 2 and 1. And Charles (Chuck) Kocsis, veteran campaigner from Detroit, survived a spectacular comeback by Arthur Perowne, 19-year-old "baby" of the British side, 4 and 2.

Sugar Ray Boxes Belloise

New York, Aug. 20 (AP).—Welterweight Champion Ray Robinson and 160-pound contender Steve Belloise, both gunning for a middleweight title shot, fight for the chance at Yankee Stadium Wednesday night.

The nontitle 10-rounder between a master boxer and a terrific puncher shapes up as the fistic "natural" of the year. Besides sharing in an expected gate of around $150,000, the boxers will be itching for a promised first crack at either Champion Jake LaMotta or Marcel Cerdan. King Jake and the Frenchman meet in return bout here September 28.

Interest in the fight has picked up considerably in the past few days and the promoting International Boxing Club predicts 25,000 or more fans will pay from $2 to $16.50 to see the contest. The scrap will be broadcast, but will not be televised. It is slated to start at 9 p. m. (EST).

Robinson is rated about a 5-to-9 favorite, but the odds may drop several points by fight time.

A rift has developed in the Robinson camp. Manager George Gainford stalked out of the camp the other day, complaining about the methods of the various trainers. Robinson hasn't looked himself in training and is even talking pessimistically of retirement.

A Little Rusty Though

Jake La Motta Scores Knockout in Fourth Round Over Tex McCrary on Television

NEW YORK, Aug. 20 (U.P.).—Jake LaMotta, the middleweight boxing champion, engaged in a bout this week that will not appear in the record books and perhaps that is just as well. He did it all for television.

For the fight fans who still have no access to television, it should be mentioned quickly that Jake won—by a "knockout" midway of the fourth round—although he didn't look too sharp.

However, the champ has just started the training grind for his September 28 title fight with Marcel Cerdan, so a little rustiness can be overlooked.

The legend on the back of the dressing gown of LaMotta's opponent identified him as "One-Round" McCrary, better known as Tex in the radio and television circles in which he and his glamorous wife, Jinx Falkenberg, circulate.

However, the script of the half-hour McCrary-Falkenberg video show, preview, demanded that Tex stay around longer than that whether he liked it or not.

McCrary, who used to do some boxing at Yale, swarmed all over LaMotta at the first bell as though he were thirsting for a shot at Cerdan.

He threw enough punches to make a centipede arm-weary. But most of them missed LaMotta, who was spending most of his time in a crouch so low that he seemed to be examining the texture of the ring covering. Occasionally the champ pushed a glove into the McCrary midsection, which, fortunately, is lean.

LaMotta took a little more interest in McCrary in the second, from which Tex emerged with a scraped left shoulder and oozed a few drops of blood.

IN THE THIRD, McCrary was half-pushed, half-punched to the canvas, where he took a count of five on one knee before resuming.

The champion put McCrary down on the same knee in the fourth and there he stayed until Referee Ruby Goldstein counted him out. Wife Jinx quickly clambered into the ring to see if her gladiator was worth salvaging.

Although he was winded and had a tender Adam's apple from contact with a LaMota fist, McCrary insisted that all of the trouble of carting crew and show out to Brooklyn's Broadway Arena had been worthwhile for the sake of television.

Gen. John Reed Kilpatrick, head of Madison Square Garden, who was at ringside, was too polite to say that boxing had been set back 50 years. Besides, he's an old Yale Blue himself.

Jethroe Fined For 'Popping Off'

Montreal, Aug. 20 (AP).—Sam Jethroe, fleet Negro center fielder of the Montreal Royals, was fined $100 and suspended for insubordination by Manager Clay Hopper last night following the first game of an International League double-headed with the Syracuse Chiefs.

Hopper said Jethroe "popped off" in the dressing room after the first game when his play was being criticized. The manager ordered Jethroe out of the second game when he continued to talk after a warning to stop.

Egyptian Puts Off Channel Swim

Folkestone, Eng., Aug. 20 (AP). Freshening winds today forced Fahmy Attalla, 40-year-old Egyptian, to call a 12-hour postponement of his fourth attempt to swim the English Channel.

He had planned to enter the channel at Cap Gris Nez, on the French side, this afternoon. Now he expects to start at 4 p. m. (EDT) on Monday.

Ray Robison Knocked Down by Spar Mate

Pompton Lakes, N. J., Aug. 20 (AP).—Cocoa Kid, a journeyman middleweight from Hartford, Conn., sent Ray Robinson to the floor today with a short right to the chin.

The welterweight champion, who fights Steve Belloise in a 10-round over-the-weight match in Yankee Stadium on Wednesday, finished the round and then rested briefly before taking on Charles Dodson in another sparring bout.

Robinson went down in the second round of his workout with the Kid. He also boxed a with Tiger Wade of San Francisco.

Track Manager Dies

Detroit, Aug. 20 (AP).—Stennis Dees, 31, manager of the newly opened Hazel Park Race Track was killed early today in a traffic crash.

Sheriff's deputies in Oakland County, where the mishap occurred, said Dees apparently had fallen asleep at the wheel of his car. It crashed into a bridge abutment.

Virginia Opens Drills Sept. 1

Charlottesville, Va., Aug. 20 (AP). Coach Art Guepe announced today he has issued a call for a 52-man University of Virginia football squad to assemble here September 1 for the state of preseason practice.

Twenty-three lettermen, headed by Captain John Thomas, of Charleston, W. Va., all-State guard for the past two years, are expected to be among the prompt arrivals along with nine nonlettered varsity squad carryovers. They will be augmented by 20 selections from last year's freshman roster.

Such Crust I Sets Record

Kalamazio, Mich., Aug. 20 (AP).—Jack Schafer's lightning-like Such Crust I set a new American powerboat speed record on nearby Gull Lake today.

Such Crust's time of 126.588 miles an hour knocked down Gar Wood's old mark that has stood for 17 years. The dean of American racers reached a speed of 124.86 Sept. 20, 1932. Danny Arena was at the controls.

Jim Ferrier Takes Lead With 65-198

Grand Rapids, Mich., Aug. 20 (AP).—Big Jim Ferrier fired a red-hot 65—7 under par—to take a four-stroke lead at the three-quarter mark in the 72-hole Grand Rapids Open Golf Tournament today.

The San Franciscan was tied with E. J. (Dutch) Harrison and Lloyd Mangrum at 133 when he teed off for his third round today. But he took charge of things in a hurry.

Ferrier racked up an eagle, 5 birdies and 12 pars on his round as he had a 33-32—65 for a 198 total.

The score tied the Cascade Hills Country Club record.

Mangrum carded a 35-34—69 for 202 and second place, while Harrison had 35-35—70 for 203 and the No. 3 spot.

Misses Two Putts

Ferrier, who is tiring of his role as runner-up on the pro golf circuit, made it plain today that he was out for the $2600 first-prize money.

His short irons were especially deadly as he repeatedly left himself with extremely short putts.

He missed two putts of less than 5 feet, but neither miss hurt him very much.

The dapper Mangrum, playing out of Chicago, got off to a bad start as he 3-putted the third hole and was 2 over par at the end of five holes.

Mangrum, No. 3 money-winner among the nation's golf pros this year, steadied down then and had 6 birdies the rest of the way. But he never could catch up with Ferrier.

Smith Fourth

Harrison, of St. Andrews, Ill., who was playing in a threesome with Ferrier, also had a costly 3-putt green early in his round. That came on the second green, and cost him strokes. He was unable to pick up on Ferrier the rest of the way.

Al Smith of Winston-Salem, N. C., held down fourth spot with a 37-33—70 for 206.

The low scores:

Jim Ferrier	66 75 65—198
Lloyd Mangrum	67 66 69—202
E. J. Harrison	65 68 70—203
Al Smith	69 67 70—206
Ky Laffoon	72 69 67—208
Dave Douglas	70 71 67—208
Lawson Little	72 68 68—208
Fred Haas, jr.	71 69 68—208
Ed Furgol	70 66 73—209
Marty Furgol	70 70 69—209
Otto Greiner	68 72 70—210
Paul O'Leary	71 68 71—210
Skip Alexander	71 71 69—211
George Fazio	67 75 69—211

Ortiz Meets Cooper Aug.29

Washington fight fans will see a genuine fight champion when Bantamweight Titleholder trades punches with Jimmy Cooper at Griffith Stadium August 29.

In the trade, they call the 32-year-old Mexican flailer "Little Joe Louis" and he comes by the handle naturally.

Ortiz is one of the two prewar champs still doing business at the same old stand. Featherweight Champ Willie Pep, whom Ortiz would like to fight, is the other.

Except for Joe Louis, Ortiz has made more title defenses than any other fighter in boxing history. He's given sixteen guys a whack at the title he won from Lou Salica seven years ago.

He lost the crown to Harold Dade two years ago, but climbed back into the same ring against Dade in 90 days and recaptured the crown.

Ortiz, born in El Centro, Calif., of Mexican parents, has fought in practically every country in the world. In the Philippines and the Hawaiian Islands, he's king. Out in that part of the United Nations they prefer the smaller, flashier fighters to the bigger, clumsier gladiators.

After meeting Cooper, whom he taught to fight while both were in the Army, Ortiz takes off for a tour of England and the continent. He returns in the winter and hopes to campaign in the East.

Carolina Team Wins

Kannapolis, N. C., Aug. 20 (AP).—Gastonia, N. C., won the Region Four title here today in the American Legion junior baseball tournament by defeating Memphis, Tenn., 5-1.

She's Now in Swim

Joel Leeman Starts Late, Climbs Fast

JOEL LEEMAN
She goes near the water

By Herb Heft
Post Reporter

YOU SAY THAT your kids are afraid of water, they won't dip their feet in the surf or even be sprinkled by the backyard hose?

Well, don't let it get you down. If they're anything like 16-year-old Miss Joel Leeman, they'll wind up as national swimming champions.

Joel, a member of the Ambassador swimming team, comes from a Navy family, so it perturbed her dad no little when she wouldn't even go near any water. She even balked at private swimming lessons.

Then one day, five years ago at the beach in Coronado, Calif., she suddenly got the urge to splash into the Pacific and ride to shore on a breaker. She did and, bingo, her fear of water was gone.

Her dad, Comdr. R. R. Leeman came back from the Far East where he headed a PBY air group known as Leeman's Demons, and like all Navy families they were on the move, this time to Key West, Fla.

There, Joel did her first serious swimming. A life guard (his name is Bill, and he's good looking, but she can't remember his last name) took her in tow and taught her some racing tricks, and how to backstroke.

SHE CAUGHT on quickly, and when her dad was transferred to Washington last winter, she joined the Ambassador team. By two weeks ago, she improved so much that she, Ellen Oberti and Dianie Wilson were able to collaborate in winning the national junior 150-meter relay title at High Point, N. C.

She's the new "pet" of Ambassador Coach Bill Armstrong, having replaced Leola Thomas, who is now in retirement.

Today at Prince Georges, she goes after Leola's D. C. junior backstroke record of 1:15.8, and next week at Takoma she tries for Leola's senior mark of 1:15.5.

Joel has been clocked in 1:13 flat at the Ambassador tank, but Coach Armstrong is worried because she's a little "wall shy." She whacked her head against the wall of the tank in making a few of her turns, and now she's a bit too wary, like baseball outfielders who have charged into the barriers chasing flies.

She hasn't quite made up her mind what she wants to do when she finishes her studies at Falls Church High where she is a sophomore now. She gets As and Bs in all her studies, and thinks she'd like to be a physical education instructor or maybe join the WAVES.

"Dad would like that," she says.

Two Games Won By Boys Club

Washington's Police Boys Club junior and senior championship teams registered a twin victory over Baltimore's champs in an intercity doubleheader yesterday on the Fairlawn diamond.

Mike McCormick belted a homer in the fourth with one on to score the winning run in the PBC No. 11's 6-5 junior triumph over Baltimore's Southern Precinct.

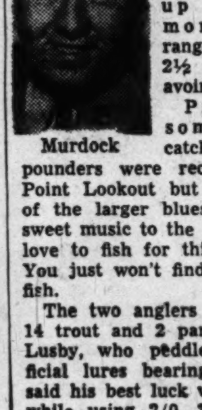
Bill McFarland hurled a three-hitter to pace PBC No. 5 to a 4-2 win over Baltimore's Southern Precinct seniors.

Gamesters Range Up to 2½ Pounds

Bigger Blues in Bay Cheer Anglers

By Ralph Murdock

ALMOST A BUSHEL of bluefish was hauled in by Bob Lusby and Tom McLaughlin while trolling off Chesapeake Beach.



Murdock

The fish, on a whole were the largest blues that have appeared in the Chesapeake Bay up to this moment and ranged up to 2½ pounds in avoirdupois.

Previously, some larger catches of one-pounders were recorded near Point Lookout but the advent of the larger blues should be sweet music to the anglers who love to fish for this species.—You just won't find any gamer fish.

The two anglers also caught 14 trout and 2 pan-sized rock. Lusby, who peddles the artificial lures bearing his name, said his best luck was achieved while using 2/0, 3/0 and 4/0 lures.

Incidentally, they are the only lures made with Polar Bear hair. Our preference is the all white 2/0 size. We recently caught 23 rock and 6 bluefish with two of the latter models.

Fishing out of Breton's Bay, a party of Alexandrians had a banner catch with Captain Ben Morgan, Mr. and Mrs. Charles B. Rollins, Mrs. Ester Lufth, and Captain Jim Douglas pulling in 175 spot and 9 trout in 4 hours of excellent sport. Bloodworms for bait did the trick. The capture was made in 20 feet of water between Blackstone and the mouth of Breton's Bay. The ladies more than held their own by administering a neat trimming to the stronger sex which was featured by a succession of double-headers. (Two fish at a time.)

HERE ARE merchants who belong to the Coral Hills Merchant's Ass'n. When not fishing in the bay, you will find them at the Coral Hills Shopping Center just over the D. C. Line. They are Dr. Chester Holcomb, Abe Kaufman, Stanley Smiraldo, Phillip Berkman, Meyer Bassin, Herman Steiner, and Harold Rabenovets. They boated 98 giant size hardheads while anchored at Cook's Point. Angler's, that's a lot of hardheads to be catching at this season of the year. This feeding ground is on the eastern shore of the Chesapeake, is south of Tilghman's Island and east of Sharp's Light.

Chalk up another bullseye for the affable Bill Bloodworth, the pilot of the Sylvia. Bill is one of two things. He is either an extremely lucky skipper or else he is just plain good. The above anglers swear by him—not at him. Bill said, "If I had known we had 98 fish aboard we would have stayed to catch two more to make an even 100. They were still hitting when we pulled anchor."

Dr. Dave Fitzgibbon, Dr. Bernard Dietz, Art Brown, Herbert Goodman and your scribe braved a strong southeast wind going to Eastern Shore for croakers. When two thirds of the way across, our motor "conked out" and we were stranded for three hours. A sailboat also sprung a leak and put out a distress signal. As they came alongside we told them of our difficulties. It was a case of the blind leading the blind.

A ship to shore telephone soon brought us aid and we were towed in to the Rod 'N' Reel Club. We transferred to the Carol Ann with young Robert Ruark at the wheel. It was just one of those days when everything goes wrong. Darkness overtook us and we lost out on the spot fishing. But we did finally end up with a nice catch of hardheads at Cook's Point. Better luck next time.

AL SCHEIBLE, at the mouth of Smith's Creek, reports that the blues have been surfacing each day although southeast and northeast winds have prevailed for the best part of the week. Good catches of trout and spot are being made at Cornfield Harbor.

A fresh water angler gets a huge kick out of catching salt water fish with fresh water tackle. Dave Coiner is no exception. He used an artificial yellow plug 2½ inches in length and baited one hook with shrimp and the other with a bloodworm. On his third cast while he was slowly reeling in, he picked up a hardhead on one hook and a spot on the other. It was the "daily double" for Dave. He modestly admits that he has been unable to duplicate the double feature but has had fair luck with single fish on the yellow plug.

Several recent cool nights have chilled the waters of the bay and some spirited trolling should be had in the next few days. Trout have moved farther up the bay and some 2½ pounders are being taken from Chesapeake Beach to South River.

If you contemplate attending the "Fishing Fair" at Solomon's Island on either September 16, 17 or 18, you had better make your reservations early. It will be the biggest fishing event to be pulled in this area. It's one you cannot afford to miss.

Dainger Girl Scores Close Victory Over Mary Ann

Bill Bennings:

AT BEL AIR

DEAR FOLKS: Don't be surprised if there is an announcement of the sale of the Pimlico and Laurel tracks in the near future. All horse owners and horse players don't go broke. One friend of mine was in the big money and I suggested that he buy a couple of horses and get out in the air. He did. His business went sour, but his horses were successful and carried him over the rough period. "I thought I was going to support those horses," he laughed the other day. "Darned if it isn't the other way around. The nags are supporting me." Don't rush out and buy horses, friends. There have been occasions when a guy's business and his horses went bad at the same time.

Duke Aumar Runs Third At Bel Air

By Walter Haight
Post Reporter

Bel Air, Md., Aug. 20.—In a stretch battle right into the wire, Dainger Girl, running for the estate of J. J. Ring, drove through off the rail to win the Fountain Green Purse, yesterday's 5 furlongs feature here before some 10,500 fans.

Dainger Girl just made it by a neck over Mrs. L. M. Carver's Mary Ann while driven by Jockey Jimmy Baird.

Mary Ann beat A. Rogan's Duke Aumar, the early leader, a half length and Mrs. H. L. Townsley's Simite was fourth, a length and a half off the third horse.

Dainger Girl, whose owner, J. J. Ring, died in Ohio several weeks ago, was the third favorite to score during the first five races and returned $5.20 while stepping the 5 panels over the good track in the creditable time of 1:00 4/5 under 117 pounds.

Field of Nine

A field of nine good allowances horses lined up in the gate for the Fountain Green and it was Duke Aumar who took the lead as the field left the chute and entered the main track.

The Airflame gelding led down the backstretch with Simite second, Louie's Line third and Mary Ann fourth as Baird restrained Dainger Girl just off the leaders.

Rounding the turn Duke Aumar still led but Mary Ann and Dainger Girl made their bids together and were right on the leader's heels at the head of the home lane. Duke Aumar started to shorten stride with a sixteenth of a mile left and Dainger Girl and Mary Ann began moving through on the inside of the tiring pace-setter.

Mary Ann Held Tight

With a few yards to go, Dainger Girl made good on the inside but Mary Ann, with Apprentice Dick Lawless riding hard, was right with her and might have been the winner but for being in tight quarters between the winner and the tiring Duke Aumar in the last few strides.

Baird also won the Lake Fanny Purse, secondary feature, with Mrs. George O. Russell's Under Cover. This event was also at five furlongs but claimers of the $3000 down to $2500 variety were involved.

Under Cover came around Gunner and Kitty Kilts on the upper bend to draw away to win by two and a half lengths over Kitty Kilts with Gunner another half length away. Skydue, the public choice, finished fourth in a dull performance. Under Cover returned $14.40 and was clocked in 1:00 4/5.

Two Famous Horse Shows In Spotlight

By Harry De Mawby, Jr.

TWO FAMOUS horse shows, and the largest in the central eastern United States, will occupy the spotlight on the next two weekends with the Keswick Hunt Club show at Keswick, Va., holding three-day and two-night sessions on August 26, 27, and 28, and the Warrenton Show, spoken of as the "Hunter Show of America," holding day and night sessions on September 4 and 5.

The Keswick Hunt Club's program has expanded by leaps and bounds in the past two years with the influx of saddle and fine harness horse divisions into the more or less exclusive Virginia Hunt country. The program for 1949 renewal offers over $7500 in prize money and lists a pony, conformation hunter, green hunter, working hunter, open jumper, three-gaited saddle horse, five-gaited saddle horse, fine harness, and roadster divisions.

The open jumper and conformation hunter divisions each feature a $1000 stake class while the remaining senior divisions each have $500 stake events as their highlights. Championships will be awarded in all divisions, the winners of which will be well on their way towards national recognition.

The committee, under the direction of Alexander Rives, John S. McIntyre and the show's capable secretary, Miss Jamie Terrill, has already announced that more than 80 individual show horse owners have made their entries, with 25 of these from the States of North and South Carolina, New York, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Oklahoma, Connecticut, Maryland and the District of Columbia.

This year marks the fiftieth anniversary of the famous Warrenton Horse Show, and judging from the entries in the preceding shows of the Virginia "A" Circuit, it promises to be one of the largest events of its history as well as one of the highlights of Virginia social circles.

The 3-year-old championship of Virginia class is traditional with the show and one of the most important classes of any horse exhibition. The coveted honor was won in 1948 by Holiday Hill Farm's Really Rugged, which will be showing this year for Mrs. Gregory McIntosh of Warrenton.

The John Barton Payne Memorial Trophy, one of the largest cups in present-day competition and reputedly valued at $35,000, is awarded to the conformation hunter titlist, and is quite naturally one of the most cherished tricolor victories in the country.

DANCING WE SHALL GO—You might say that Left Fielder Del Ennis of the Phillies and Shortstop Bill Rigney of the Giants go into their dance with graceful gestures in yesterday's game in Philadelphia. Ennis slides safely into second base as Rigney leaps for a bad throw. The Phils won, 9-3 doing very well. Their radio audience drops off the same as their home attendance does.

Broadcasts May Increase

"Washington is a cosmopolitan city. People are in here from every State, town and hamlet in the country. They would like to hear descriptions of other games, say the New York teams.

"We tried to work out an arrangement for the broadcast of New York games in the National League two years ago. We talked with league officials, and they said there were no legal objections, if we got permission of the Senators.

"But the Nats turned us down."

Attorney Frank U. Fletcher, co-owner of WARL, said: "It is reasonable that a team be given exclusive rights on its own games. And it might be fair for a league to protect its own games, that is, no broadcast of a New York, Cleveland, Boston American League game in Washington.

Top Drawer Authority

"But it certainly is restrictive to not allow a Brooklyn game in the National League to be broadcast in Washington, an American League city."

Also involved in the investigation is baseball's policy of awarding World's Series rights to a single network and perhaps also the arrangements for Western Union play-by-play service.

Stations other than WARL that have filed complaints include WISR, Butler, Pa.; KHMO, Hannibal, Mo.; WSAY, Rochester, N. Y.; WDXB, Chattanooga, Tenn.; WDIA, Memphia, Tenn.; KLIF, Dallas, Tex.; WATL, Atlanta, Ga., and WSOY, Decatur, Ill.

Top-drawer authority of the Justice Department and baseball representatives have held two conferences.

The department has been represented by Assistant Attorney General Harbert A. Bergson, head of the Anti-Trust Division; Homer Balbridge, chief of the Litigation Section; George B. Haddock, assistant to Balbridge, and James Browning, another assistant detailed to baseball work.

Consent Decree Implied

Counsel for Commissioner A. B. Chandler has included John Lord O'Brian of the Washington law firm of Covington, Burling, Rublee and Schorb, of which Secretary of State Dean Acheson is a former member.

Broadcasting Magazine, widely recognized as the official publication of radio and television, says of the department's investigation:

Another indication of early developments was seen in letters sent by the Department early this month to stations which have filed protests.

"Implying that a consent decree may be in the offing, the letters ask the complainants' views on a plan limiting the extent of the various clubs' control over the broadcast of games of other clubs.

"Despite this evidence of the department's view that existing practices are restrictive, leaders of the opposition feel the suggested plan itself would have no practical value and are preparing to fight it.

A Solution in Sight

"It appeared almost certain that the first two Justice-Baseball conferences would be followed by another, or perhaps several others counsel for Commissioner Chandler reportedly were assured that the department would respect an 'understanding' between Mr. Chandler and Attorney General Tom Clark to the effect that no suit would be filed until the commissioner had been notified and given a chance to be heard, as is customary in such matters."

As to an early solution to the problem, baseball attorneys have broached this idea in the form of a compromise:

That a local club be given veto power over local broadcasts of other games only at times when the local club is playing at home or having a road broadcast or telecast at home.

This, baseball feels, would remove most of the legal objections to the controversial rule and that the degree of "restraint" would be upheld by the courts as "reasonable."

Broadcasting Magazine quotes the reaction of WISR, Butler, Pa.

"A consent decree which grants 2 per cent relief is worse than no consent decree at all because it will give baseball's private government a basis of authority it lacks today and will make it practically impossible for any individual station to attack baseball's restrictive and illegal practices in a privae antitrust suit."

There the matter rests for the time being, but a Justice Department official said last week that "some decision should be made soon."

D. C. AAU Title Swim Tonight

The District of Columbia AAU junior outdoor swim championships will be staged tonight at Prince Georges Country Club pool, commencing at 6:30.

Twelve of the 14 events are titular races and are open to the public.

Both men and women will compete for honors in the 50 and 100 freestyles, 100-yard backstroke, 100 breast stroke and 150-yard medley relay. Also on the agenda is the low-board diving for men and women.

In conjunction with the former event, the men's senior low-board with defending champ Irving (Soupy) Bridges reigning as pre-meet favorite will be staged.

The field of some 100 entries is composed of the Takoma Park, Ambassador and Washington Boys' Club teams and a host of unattached swimmers from Walter Reed Hospital and the Indian Spring and Congressional Country Clubs.

Completing the program are a pair of age-group 25-yard backstroke races for boys and girls.

50-Lap Feature Listed at Lanham

A 50-lap midsummer championship event involving 16 finalists and offering a $2000 purse will headline the weekly stock car racing at the West Lanham Speedway Wednesday night at 8:30 o'clock.

Thirty drivers from the East and South will fill out the championship field, and the largest crowd to assemble at Lanham since 1946 is anticipated.

Two Junior Golf Events Set Tuesday

Two city-wide championship golf tournaments involving boys and girls representing junior clinics of East Potomac, Rock Creek, Fort Dupont and Anacostia are set for East Potomac's public golf course Tuesday morning at 10 o'clock.

Eighteen boys are to tee off in 18-hole competition while nine girls will appear in a nine-hole event.

These youngsters ranging from 10 through 17 years qualified in eliminations staged on their respective courses recently, and represent the pick of 150 juniors who availed themselves of the free instruction made possible in eight lessons on each course.

Supervisor Eddie Bean last night announced that prizes will be awarded the winner and runner-up in both the boys' and girls' tourneys.

Al Treder, East Potomac's professional, has enrolled six boys and one girl for Tuesday's tests. Jim Bridgett, Walt Reilly, Kendall Lorenz and Mark Spies all qualified in the boys' 13-17 year group while Ronnie Baxter was named an alternate. Kirk Williams and Robin Ehlert made the grade in the 10-13 class while Marjorie Dunn is East Potomac's only girl entry.

Fort Dupont will be represented by four boys and a girl, the girl being attractive, and talented, Eileen Blount of Cheverly, Md. Vernon Worsley, Art Douglas, David Smith and Charles Bodle are the boys.

Rock Creek has entered four boys and as many girls, including Pat Levy, Tom Teal, Jr. Anderson and Mike Clendennin and Anne Fadley, Jane Grove, Doris Gardiner and Pat Atwell.

Charles Feder, who finished No. 1 in Rock Creek's eliminations, is out of town and has been succeeded by Levy in the No. 1 spot.

Anacostia will be represented by four boys and three girls. They are: Norman English, Ray Marvin, Lloyd Gregg and Ray Herbert and Lorraine Collins, Diane Hinchey and June Cochran.

Answers Critics

Schroeder Will Play In Nationals

BROOKLINE, MASS., Aug. 20 (AP).—Vowing he never would turn professional, Ted Schroeder, the U. S. Davis Cup tennis team's ace, today said he would make his first appearance in the national singles tournament since 1942 after participating in next week's international trophy competition.

Schroeder, who won the singles championship seven years ago, before entering the U. S. Navy, has been the target of much criticism because he has refused to permit teenis to interfere with Californian business affairs.

"Absolutely no pressure was brought to bear upon me from any quarter to influence my decision to compete again in the national singles," he explained.

"I do feel this is one way to repay the game of amateur tennis and, in particular, the Southern California Tennis Association, for all that the game has done for me.

"In the past, as now, much criticism has fallen to me for the limited amount of big time tennis I have played. Perhaps this criticism has been deserved, but never have I dodged a meeting with any one on a tennis court to protect my record or to enhance my chance of being selected on the Davis Cup team.

"I have a personal situation which I consider to be my concern, and mine alone, and I have acted accordingly," the La cresenta, Calif., star continued.

"It is certainly true that I have most seriously considered a career in professional tennis. Neither this year nor in the future will I ever entertain the idea of such a career. This decision is final and irrevocable.

"In participating in the National Singles Championships this year, I shall consider my debt to tennis paid to the point where in the future I shall play as much or as little as I desire. Many players in amateur tennis have evidenced a great desire to play me at Forest Hills, N. Y. I shall be most satisfied to stand on my performance in that event," he concluded.

All-Aussie Finals Result as Gonzales, Parker Bow

Begins This Fall

Army Navy Has $50,000 To Improve

THE ARMY Navy Country Club will spend approximately $50,000 this fall on improvements on the course.

A storm fence will be built completely around the 27-hole layout at a cost of $25,000.

New greens will be built on six holes, Nos. 3, 4, 6, 13, 15 and 17, and new tees on Nos. 3, 4, 6, 7, 13, 15 and 16.

Yardage on some of the holes will be changed so that par on all three nines will be 36 instead of the present par of 34 on the first nine, 37 on the second nine and 36 on the third nine.

Construction work on new Glebe road will knock out the present sixteenth tee and fifteenth green.

All of the remodeling will be done in plenty of time for full layout to be ready for play early next spring.

ONE OF THE first pro-amateur golf tournaments ever sponsored on a District public parks course is scheduled for East Potomac a week from tomorrow, August 29, when 35 pros and approximately 65 amateurs tee off.

It was announced last night that $250 purse has been added to the pros' prize list.

Al Houghton, Al Treder, John Bass, Jack Isaacs and John Musser are some of the pros already entered, and the remainder will be announced.

Polo Makes Bow At Martinsburg; Match Planned

Martinsburg, W. Va., Aug. 20.—Polo is making its debut in this section. A team is now training at North End Airport here.

Johnny Cussin, a player from Long Island, N. Y., is acting as captain and coach. Cussin and Derwood Slonaker organized the team.

The team now includes seven regulars, and a number of others are expected to start practicing soon. This group includes Duke Martin, George Crawford, Radie Evans, Melvin Wilson and Buck Bardino.

Practices are held Wednesdays, Fridays and Sunday evenings. Cussin said a competitive match may be staged at the airport at the end of September. Negotiations are being carried on with a similar team in Front Royal, Va.

Browns Reported Weighing Shift

Wichita, Kans., Aug. 20 (AP).—St. Louis may become a one-club major league city with the Browns moving to Los Angeles by 1952, J. G. Taylor Spink, publisher of the Sporting News, told a press conference today.

Spink, answering a question, said that the plight of the Browns is at the gate. Cleveland, he said, drew over two million fans last season to the between 200,000 and 300,000 by the Browns, and added that a club that fails to attract larger attendance than the Browns at home "just can't survive."

Bromwich Rated Tops In Doubles

Brookline, Mass., Aug. 20 (AP).—This country's chances of successfully defending the Davis Cup hit a 10-year low when the men's national doubles tennis tourney wound up in an all-Australian final today at Longwood.

There was such a finish here back in 1939 when the Aussies last lifted the prized international trophy from its American defenders.

Jack Bromwich, the Australian ace, and Billy Sidwell turned in spectacular performances while defeating Pancho Gonzales, the national singles titlist, and the veteran Frankie Parker, 13—11, 10—8, 10—8.

And while so doing, Bromwich, who shared the 1939 national team title with countryman Adrian Quist, stamped himself as just about the world's best current doubles competitor.

Sedgman, Worthington, Surprise

Before Gonzales and Parker, who won at Wimbledon this year, bowed out, the other half of the Australian Davis Cup forces, Frank Sedgman and George Worthington, defeated Italy's Gianni Cucelli and Marcello del Bello, 7—5, 6—3, 6—4, in their semifinal.

It was played before a 5000 crowd, the largest in the ancient Longwood Club's history.

Previously, Sedgman and Worthington provided the tourney with its most surprising upset by defeating Champions Gardnar Mulloy and Billy Talbert, who have been given the United States Davis Cup doubles assignments, 6—4, 1—6, 7—5, 9—7, in the quarter-finals round.

During yesterday's action, Louise Brough of Los Angeles and Mrs. Margaret Osborne duPont of Wilmington, Del., who are striving for their eighth straight women's doubles titlists entered the last bracket by defeating Dorothy Head of Alameda, Calif., and Betty Rosenquest of South Orange, N. J., 6—1, 6—1.

And today the smooth-stroking Doris Hart of Miami, and Shirley Fry of Akron, Ohio, won the dubious honor of contesting against such invincible opponets by defeating Mrs. Patricia Canning Todd of La Jolla, Cilf., and Gertrude (Georgeous Gussie) Moran of Los Angeles, 12—10, 4—6, 6—4.

Allison, Hall Win

Wilmer Allison, of Austin, Tex., a former national singles and doubles champion, and J. Gil Hall of New York, gained the men's veterans' doubles titles by defeating Pittsburgh's Martin Tressel and W. Russell Unger, 6—3, 6—0. G. Diehl Mateer, sr., and jr., of Ardmore, Pa., gained the father-son laurels with a 4—6, 6—4, 6—3 win over Dr. Carl Fischer, sr., and jr., of Philadelphia.

Brookline's Mrs. Hazel Hotchkiss Wightman, famed as the "queen mother" of women's tennis in this country, and Mrs. Marjorie Gladman Buck of New York, gained the women's veterans doubles honors, 8—6, 5—7, 6—4 over Virginia Ellis of Cambridge, Mass., and Freda Scharman of New York.

As a result, Mrs. Wightman, at 62, can boast of winning 41 national championships since 1909, when she gained the first of her four single titles.

Both the men's and women's final matches will be played tomorrow afternoon.

AMONG THE BIGGEST—The Washington Redskins will have two of the tallest tackles in professional football this fall in John (Tree) Adams (left) and Bob Hendren. Adams is 6 feet 7 inches high, and Hendren, a inch taller. Shoulder to shoulder they are so huge that almost an entire team can be hidden behind them, as this picture shows. Adams is a Redskin veteran while Hendren played with USC last season

Travers Manages Alexandria Alley

Walter H. Travers has been named to manage the Alexandria Bowling Center when it reopens this fall, owner Harry Swagart said yesterday. The alleys have been closed since last spring when a fire gutted the building.

Travers, who is a lifetime resident of Alexandria, was a football and baseball star at William and Mary and is a graduate of Alexandria High School.

Scanning the Skins

Szafaryn's 225 Too Light

By Bill Burnett
Post Reporter

(This is another in a series weighing the Redskins, position by position.)

OCCIDENTAL COLLEGE, Calif., Aug. 19.—The case of Len Szafaryn could be a tip-off on the Washington Redskin's tackle situation.

Szafaryn was only the Associated Press' "lineman of the week" on two occasions last season. He is the 'Skin's No.3 draft choice on the strength of this brilliant tackle job with North Carolina last year.

Yet, at 225 pounds, he isn't heavy enough for a tackle post with Washington's National Football League entry. The chances are that he'll be moved to a guard spot, leaving seven huskier young men of 235 pounds or more to battle it out for six vacancies.

"Our big improvement at tackle," says former All-Pro tackle Turk Edwards, now line coach of the 'Skins, "is caused by the presence of Bob Hendren and Laurie Niemi, they're both rookies but they'll furnish a lot of help to the old-timers."

In Hendren, the Redskins have the tallest man in the NFL. The Southern California grad goes up and up to 8 inches over 6 feet, dwarfing Niemi's 6-1. But both scale around 240 and figure to fill large gaps in Redskin defenses.

Moved over from guard because of his size is Freddy Boensch, a rangy 235-pounder. And four regular tackles of 1948 are back with more experience, if nothing else.

John (Tree) Adams, starting his fifth season with the Marshalled forces, is as lazy-looking as ever. Mike Rousses is out for his second year, now over 250 pounds and stronger after an off season of truck piloting.

Big John Koniszewski, George Washington University's contribution to the 'Skins is five years older than when he first joined the club but he's smart by now in line play. Finally, but not least there's red-headed John Sanchez, the brawny lad from San Francisco University who was bought from the Detroit Lions in 1947.

"Three tackles will be in our five-man line a lot of times on defense," Edwards says, "because we've finally got enough of them. Even if you discount our tackle talent, you have to admit all that weight ought to stop somebody."

Redskin Rookie

'Wh-o-o-sh'—and Mr. Dowda Is Off Like Mr. Jet Propulsion

Occidental College, Calif., Aug. 20.—At regular intervals as the Washington Redskin backfield corps goes through signal drills, there's a loud wh-o-o-sh, like a rocket plane taking off.

That's Harry Dowda.

Dowda

He actually makes the noise with his mouth, but some sideline experts aren't too sure. They think he's Mr. Jet Propulsion himself, and his manner of starting and streaking forward lends to the illusion.

Harry is one of the fastest halfbacks on the squad, with all his 195 pounds and 6-feet-3 frame He's fresh out of Wake Forest, where he captained the '48 club, but he's a prime reason why the Redskins are calling their halfbacks the best in years.

Versatility is the big former paratrooper's second name. With the Deacons he played both the T-formation and single wing, on offense as well as defense.

Against North Carolina in both 1947 and 1948 he played the entire 60 minutes, the first year scoring one of the touchdowns that upset the Tarheels.

Dowda is the "crazy legs" of the Redskins backfield. If ever a rookie had a berth cinched it's the son of an old-time Southern Association baseball star. 'Skin coaches think he'll go who-o-sh through a lot of National Football League lines.

Annapolis Boat Tied For 1st Place

Centreville, Md., Aug. 20 (AP).—At the end of the first two races today, Jack Martin of the Annapolis Yacht Club and Bob Harrell from the Portsmouth (Va.) Boat Club were tied in competition for the Corsica River Yacht Club's new permanent Hampton trophy.

A total of 139 entries took part in the Corsica River Club's eighth annual regatta.

Martin, national Hampton champion, sailed My Dream to victory in the morning race as Harrell's Wind Rider III finished third. The situation was reversed in the afternoon brush when Wind Rider III won and My Dream came in third.

The Hamptons put the biggest fleet on the river with 32 skippers competing for the new prize.

Art Deacon's armade took the lead for the Harry B. Wilmer Memorial trophy in the star class. Armade, a Larchmont (N. Y.) Yacht Club entry, placed second in the morning race to Bill Myer's White Shadow from the Tred Avon Yacht Club. But Deacon's craft won the afternoon event while White Shadow dropped to fourth.

The Chesapeake Bay comet champion, Bob Gibson of the Miles River Yacht Club, piloted his Green Gryphon to triumphs in both comet races. At stake was the C. Lowndes Johnson trophy.

The holder of the Johnson trophy, Jim Merrill of the Red Dragon Canoe Club, N. J., withdrew from the first race after a foul and dropped out of the running.

In the single-race cruising class competition, George Lee sailed the Naval Academy yawl Active to victory in the B division while Barbara Lucke of the host club piloted her Oxford 400, Linda, in first in the C division.

Winners in the other events will be determined after tomorrow's third races.

Czechs Will Send Only 'Reliable' Athletes Abroad

Prague, Aug. 20 (AP).—Czechoslovakia, embarrassed by desertions of its sports stars, henceforth will send abroad only "politically reliable" athletes who are "'good and honest representatives of the people's democracy."

And furthermore, the team managers must not only be politically reliable but alert enough to know that their charges are safely in bed by 11 p. m. and none had flown away.

This was announced tonight by officials of Sokol, the Czech national sports organization. Their remarks were reported by the newspaper Prace, mouthpiece of the Communist Premier Minister Antonin Zapotocky.

The announcement was brought to a nation still stirred by the flight into exile of Czech tennis stars Jaroslav Drobny and Vladimir Cernik.

Muzzle Loading Will Be Revived

The opening and dedication of the $40,000 Berwyn Rod and Gun Club on September 10 and 11 will feature a temporary revival of America's original sport, muzzle loading. Fifty entries will take part in the all day contest, with some of them coming several hundred miles to compete.

Also included on the two-day agenda at Muirkirk, Md., will be a registered ATA trapshoot, a State Police pistol match, a registered NRA small bore rifle tournament, an archery contest, horse shoe pitching, and a dinner dance.

La-Ha-La First in All Three Heats

By Happy Walker

Cambridge, Md., Aug. 20.—The story of the Cambridge Yacht Club's Gold Cup classic held today on the Choptank River can be told in two words—Harry Lynn.

The sleek Allison-motored Ventnor hull La-Ha-La, winner of last year's initial Gold Cup affair, with Lynn at the throttle, made it a three-heat repeat, in the 45-mile race, against not too stiff competition.

The Lake Hopatcong speed wizard's best heat time of 70.203 miles per hour was indicative of the afternoon's treacherous water conditions, inasmuch as La-Ha-La has been clocked at better than 115 miles per hour in previous trials.

The nearest competition to Lynn's mahogany speedster was a newcomer to gold cup ranks, Freeport (Long Island) Automobile Dealer George Sarant, whose Etta readily took second place with 900 points.

Here again the choppy course slowed down the contestants as Sarant attempted time and again to challenge the leader. Etta, winner of the first heat of last week's national sweepstakes at Red Bank, N. J., and a smooth-water boat, could not master the difficult course in sufficient speeds to harass Lynn.

Clarence Clark, Norfolk, Va., in his Tiger Cat, probably the smallest of the Gold Cup field, made a stab at the course in the second heat only to come a-cropper due to mechanical failures caused by the contrary waters.

Dan Murphy's Dee Jay of Philadelphia, Pa., handily won the 7-litre even run simultaneous to the gold cups, despite a disappointing first heat in which he barely finished.

Commodore Ed Evans predicted that tomorrow's crowded schedule would boast some 80 entries including two Canadian boats on hand to participate in the final day's events, which include national championships in racing runabouts from A through E, as well as 49-cubit inch, 135-cubit inch and 225-cubit inch hydros.

Lynn's success today brought out the fact that he has only to repeat his victory one more time in order to retain the Cambridge gold cup as his permanent possession.

Moseley Wins Service Golf

Montgomery, Ala., Aug. 20 (AP).—Paced by sharp-shooting Capt. Fred Moseley of Portsmouth, Va., the Air Force walked off with the 1949 interservice golf championship today.

Moseley duplicated last year's feat in finishing first. He was two under par over the 6,196-yard Maxwell Field course today. This gave him a 282, six under regulation figures for the 72-holes.

The Portsmouth shotmaker finished two strokes up on a teammate, Col. Jim Wilson of Washington, D. C., the runner-up.

Air Force golfers won the James V. Forrestal team trophy again with a 2,326 aggregate score. The Army was second with 2,358 and the Navy last with 2,402.

Mexican League, Trautman Meet

Fort Worth, Tex., Aug. 20 (AP).—Affiliation of the Mexican League with organized baseball is being discussed here today.

George Trautman, president of the minor leagues, came to Fort Worth for a conference with Dr. Eduardo Quijano Pitman, president of the Mexican League, expressing the hope that the circuit south of the border becomes a partner with American baseball.

Superman Will Wrestle Leone

Michele Leone and the Golden Superman will resume their hero-villain series Wednesday at Joe Turner's Arena, meeting in a third rematch on a card that is topped by two all-girl feature bouts.

Leone won his straight match from Superman last week when the latter lost his head after a series of fouls by the rough Italian.

Nell Stewart and Violet Viann meet in one of the features while Helen Hild and Cecelia Blevins tangle in the other.

Mexican Polo Team Plays U. S. Today

Hinsdale, Ill., Aug. 20 (AP).—The Mexican Gracida brothers and an Oak Brook Polo Club team will play the first of three matches for the North America cup at Oak Brook field.

The Mexican squad is a 27-goal combination, including Ruben, Gabriel, Guillermo and Alejandro Gracida. Oak Brook is rated at 25 goals.

At San Antonio

Zoe Ann Olsen Wins Second Successive AAU Diving Crown

San Antonio, Tex., Aug. 20 (AP). Blonde Zoe Ann Olsen of Oakland, Calif., twisted and somersaulted her way to a second successive women's National AAU one-meter diving championship today.

The Olympics ace picked the difficult dives to boost her winning total to 132.70 points, 23.14 points more than second place Junior Stover of Glendale, Calif., could amass.

A running half-gainer, half-twisting forward somersault, tuck position, clinched the crown for the Athens Athletic Club contender. For this one, the judges gave her 91.75 points.

The diving title was the only one decided in the afternoon's program.

Mary Francis Cunningham of Newark Athletic Club, Newark, N. J., placed third in the diving with 108.56 points.

Zoe Ann, who practices in a multi-colored suit and competes in a severe black number, took the lead on the first dive, a front jackknife, and never gave it up. In her optional dives she picked those with a great degree of difficulty, ones that would pay off in high scores.

One of her dives, a double forward somersault, netted 43 points.

Miss Stover's attempt at a double somersault garnered only 22 points when she got off coming out of the second one.

First place winners in the three heats of the 110-yard backstroke preliminaries were Sharon Geary, Los Angeles Athletic Club, 1:21.5; Barbara Jenson, Crystal Plunge, San Francisco, 1:21.2, and Muriel Mellon, Los Angeles Athletic Club, 1:22.2.

Japanese Win U.S. Swim Title

Los Angeles, Aug. 20 (AP).—The American swimming championship is firmly in the possession of Japan.

Incomparable Hironoshin Furuhashi and company finished their mop-up of National AAU titles last night as Mr. F. clicked off another world record in the 800-meter free style.

But, fortunately for American face, unheralded Robert Gibe of the Detroit Athletic Club came through to win the 100 meters and prevent a free style sweep by the Nipponese.

The big gold cup emblematic of the American team title goes home with the Tokyo Swim Club tomorrow night. The six-man Nip team amassed 62 points, more than the next two teams combined.

The big buzz still was on over Furuhashi's unheard of feats of battering world's records for the 400, 800 and 1500 meters on successive nights. He also led his mates to a new international standard in the 800-meter free style relay.

The 21-year-old aquatic machine from Fujiyama negotiated the 800 meters in 9:35.5, chipping 15.4 big seconds off Bill Smith's mark set in 1941.

Warrenton Horse Scores

Hot Springs, Va., Aug. 20.—Miss Shirley McGavock of Charlottesville, Va., tonight rode Baby Seal to the conformation championship of the 21st annual Bath County Horse Show.

Reserve conformation champion was Dalecracker, an entry of Mr. and Mrs. W. Baggin Perry, of Cobham, Va.

Frosty Morn, owned by Rick Cocker, of Hartsville, S. C., took the jumper championship, with Little Hero, owned by Alec Hemley, of Charlottes, N. C., in reserve.

Working hunter champion was Roydesal, the entry of Mrs. T. Kenneth Ellis, of Hot Springs, Va. Reserve in this class was Petrescue, owned by Martin Vogel of Warrenton, Va.

The green hunter championship went to Jack Be Nimble, owned by Mile-Away Stables of Southern Pines, N. C. Gentry, the entry of Mr. and Mrs. Raymond Barbin, of Keswick, Va., was in reserve.

Burwell Takes Tennis Title

Ted Burwell won the District of Columbia Recreation Department's Government employes tennis tournament yesterday by scoring a 7—5, 6—3 final round win over Bill Gifford on the Rock Creek courts.

Burwell then teamed up with his victim to register a 6—1, 6—2 swamping of George Herbert and Dick Leighton in the doubles finals.

Channel Swim Is Postponed

Folkestone, Eng., Aug. 20 (AP). Choppy seas on the French side of the channel forced Egypt's Fahmy Attalla to postpone again tonight an attempt to swim from Cap Gris Nez to Dover.

The Cuban swimmer Jose Antonio Cortinas said today he will make a new attempt to swim the channel August 29.

Cortinas started on August 18 but abandoned his try after a six-hour battle with the cold, choppy seas, told the Associated Press he is perfectly fit.

GW High Addition Nearly Complete

Construction work on the new permanent grandstands at the George Washington High School Stadium will be completed within the next 10 days, making it the finest football park in the area.

The seating capacity will be 11,000, and with temporary stands in the end zones the new structure will hold 14,000. Also new restroom facilities will be constructed.

Barbara Littincott First in Cup Event

Annapolis, Md., Aug. 20 (AP).—Nineteen-year-old Barbara Littincott of Palmyra, N. J., was first across the line today in the first Duster Class race for the Fleet Admiral Halsey trophy.

The events are being staged by the National Duster Class Yacht Racing Association in the Severn River off the Naval Academy.

Police Think Escaped Boat Prisoner Dead

Police yesterday were dragging the Potomac for a man who jumped from the excursion boat Bear Mountain Friday night after his arrest as a purse thief.

Capt. Otha Saunders of the Harbor Precinct said he believed the man, Jack Uling Martin, 25, of 415 Randolph st. nw, had drowned.

According to police, Martin had taken a billfold containing $7 from the purse of Margaret Gathright of Nebraska Hall, Arlington Farms, Va.

Precinct Detective Ralph W. Creel of the general assignment squad happened to be aboard, was told of the theft by a woman who had observed it. He arrested Martin and with Purser James Meehan placed him in the brig.

At about 11:15 p. m., as the Bear Mountain was returning to her slip and nearing Bolling Field, Martin escaped from the brig by pushing out a heavy wire screen from a back window.

The boat was stopped and the waters were searched for about an hour.

Virginia GOP Drive Headed By Straughan

Roanoke, Va., Aug. 20 (AP).—With an eye on the approaching gubernatorial election in November, the State Republican Central Committee met here today to adopt a platform and select a campaign chairman.

The committee meeting, attended in person or by proxy by 24 of its 32 members, picked Nile Straughan, Fredericksburg grocery executive, to head the campaign. Richmond was picked as the headquarters site, but date for opening the office was delayed pending further arrangements by party leaders.

Reports in early afternoon papers that the committee had considered a resolution presented by Miss Phyllis Otley, State GOP vice chairman, calling for a purge of party officers and committee members who assisted in the Democratic primary or did not participate in the Republican primary upset the harmony.

No resolution had been presented to that effect, and the Republicans later adopted a resolution that condemned the article.

Firm Accused In Wisconsin Farm Strike

Madison, Wis., Aug. 20 (AP).—Two officials of a food products company were named today in warrants charging them with making misrepresentations to Southern migratory employes in persuading them to work in Wisconsin.

Named were Joseph Racek, president of the Mazo Food Products Co. at nearby Mazomanie, and his brother, Frank, also an officer of the firm.

Herman Kerl, Dane County sherif, who signed the complaints, said the charges were based on an investigation which followed a strike of 40 Negroe workers from Georgia and the Carolinas.

The workers struck last night, demanding increased wages, and complaining living condiitons were unsatisfactory at the firm's farm. Some paraded around the State capitol, distributing handbills headed "End Slavery in Wisconsin."

A tentative agreement to end the controversy, drawn up last night, still was under discussion tonight.

3 Scholarships Offered in Area By Georgetown

Three scholarships, open only to persons who work in daytime in the Washington area, will be offered by the Georgetown University School of Foreign Service for its term beginning next montth.

The scholarships, according to J. Raymond Trainer, secretary of the school, each will be worth about $2500. Study will be in the school's evening department, leading toward bachelor of science degrees in eitheir foreign service or business administration.

Competitive examinations for the scholarships will be held at 10 a. m., September 10, Trainer said. The new term of the school opens Stepember 19. Additional information may be obtained from the school.

Legion Roars For Maryland Bonus in Cash

Baltimore, Aug. 20 (AP).—The Maryland American Legion today indorsed a proposal that veterans of World War II be given cash bonuses by the State.

Delegates to the Legion's thirty-first annual convention roared their approval of a resolution calling on the General Assembly to enact a cash-bonus law.

The resolution held that financial losses suffered by Maryland veterans during the last war, coupled with the high cost of living, education and housing, make it imperative that the cash payment be distributed.

It specified that payments should be at the rate of $10 for each month of service in this country and $15 for each month a veteran spent overseas, with a maximum of $500 to any one individual.

A bill calling for the same rate of payments was defeated during the 1949 General Assembly session. At that time, it was estimated such a bonus would cost the State almost 100 million dollars.

The resolution was submitted by the General Joseph Haller Post of Baltimore.

Fenton L. Nichols, a World War I veteran, led the opposition.

He asked the 1100 delegates to heed former President Herbert Hoover's advice that the Nation is heading toward collectivism because of excessive Government spending.

Delegate Salvatore Longo of Baltimore called on the delegates to support the bonus resolution. He said he wanted the voters to have a chance to vote on it later at a referendum.

Physical Culturist Macfadden, at 81, Jumps in 'Chute

Dansville, N. Y., Aug. 20 (AP)—Physical Culturist Bernard Macfadden made his first parachute jump today and walked away smiling.

Macfadden came down about 7:20 p.m. in a field half a mile from Dansville airport.

Mrs. Macfadden rolled up to the scene in a red convertible, jumped out, ran to meet her 81-year-old husband and shouted:

"Oh, you wonderful man, you."

Macfadden stamped around climbing out of his parachute rig.

"It was wonderful coming down," he said.

He jumped from about 2000 feet.

Macfadden's announced purpose was to prove "this growing old idea is all nonsense."

Boasts Two Double Winners

Ambassador Swimming Team Fourth in Meet at Baltimore

Baltimore, Md., Aug. 20—Baltimore's Lakewood swimming team scored 139 points to capture the 29th annual Baltimore Sun swimming meet at the Lakewood municipal pool today.

The Ambassador Club of Washington, D. C., finished fourth with the Knights of Columbus and the Y-Brook teams, of Baltimore, taking second and third.

Ten-year-old Dennis Pekin of Ambassador highlighted the boys' 25-yard freestyle event by finishing way out in front with a time of 15.5 seconds.

Ambassador also produced two double winners, Diane Wilson and Ellen Oberti. Diane took both the 25 and 50 yard freestyle girls events and Ellen won the 50 and 100 yard freestyle in the women's division.

Barry Wall completed Ambassador's crew of winners by taking the 100-yard breaststroke with a time of 106.4.

White Brick Rambler Exclusive Riverwood

We know this is an expensive home; but it's in the neighborhood of expensive homes.

We know that everyone cannot afford to live either in this house or this neighborhood.

We also know there are people who seek these 3 advantages primarily.

1—Immediate proximity to Washington.

2—A gracious neighborhood of stable values.

3—A lovely home.

This is a modern 98 ft. white brick rambler, across a corner ½ acre wooded lot. It has a slate roof; enormous living room, exquisite powder room, 3 bedrooms, 2 baths, plus maid's room and bath; full basement with tiled floor and fireplace. The kitchen is Geneva with GE refrigerator, gabage disposal, electric dishwasher. All of this is 10 minutes from town by new George Washington Parkway. The price is $39,500. Business Outlook

By J. A. Livingston

Doubtful Strategy of Steel Officials

A good case can be made for not raising steel wages. The steel executives appearing before President Truman's three-man fact-finding board in New York are making it, too. The case is: The constant roundelay of wage-price-wage boosts has got to stop some time. Why not now? It's as rudimentary as that.

Livingston

The men of steel are not content to let the facts speak. As one observer expressed it, "Managemen carries emotions to the hearings, the union statistics." That's not entirely accurate. Philip Murray, head of the United Steelworkers, got his Scotch up early. He accused the heads of the steel industry of being the "most sanctimonious band of professional racketeers in this country." But he was promptly rebuked.

Carroll Daugherty, chairman of the fact-finding board, struck the words from the record, and said: "We are here to hear the facts in an unemotional way." Murray had a purpose. He was talking for the benefit of steel workers in particular and of workers in general. He was trying to stir public opinion in his favor.

Clarence B. Randall, president of Inland Steel, and Arthur B. Homer, president of Bethlehem, let their emotions go, too—but in a different direction. Randall accused President Truman of "repealing collective bargaining" by appointing the fact-findng board. And Homer brought on a rebuke from Samuel I. Rosenman, a member of the panel, a former Supreme Court Justice in New York, a former general counsel to both Presidents Roosevelt and Truman, and a man of stature on his record, when he declared that Bethlehem could not approve "an irregular procedure" designed to force "concessions to the unions."

Rosenman demanded: "Am I to understand you assume that we were set up for the purpose of recommending an increase?" Homer indicated that Bethlehem could only assume that there was a good possibility of that. Whereupon Rosenman suggested that it was in order for Homer to withdraw the statement and apologize. Homer then said he did not intend to cast any reflection on this board. But he let his statement stand.

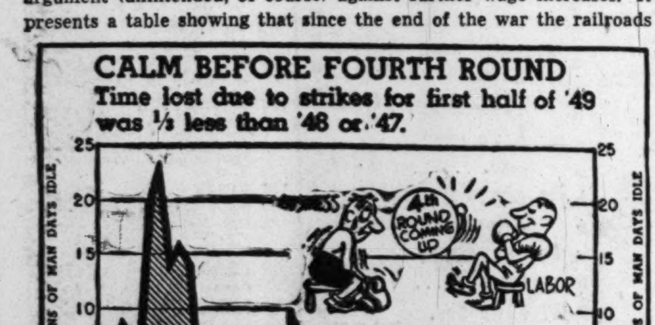
Doubtful Strategy

Murray didn't impugn the board. He attacked the steel companies. But Homer declared: "This board, this industry and this country are face to face with the question whether a few unions can, by threat of Nation-wide strikes, force the Nation to accept a fourth round of wage increases which is not justified on any grounds. I want to make this point clear—Bethlehem cannot and will not approve any such action."

The point is this: Once having yielded to the President and agreed to appear before the board, the companies should have been gracious about it—as a matter of manners and strategy. Why arch the backs of men who are going to decide your fate? You can determine after their decision whether to accept it.

Freight Rates, Coal, Iron, Etc.

The Bureau of Transport Economics and Statistics of the Interstate Commerce Commision has just published an excellent and persuasive argument (unintended, of course) against further wage increases. It presents a table showing that since the end of the war the railroads have had eight separate freight increases, totting up to 57 per cent. The latest, granted August 2, was 3.7 per cent. All these have been in response to higher costs of raw materials, supplies, and wages. Yet earnings are not increasing. Rather, the railroads are barely holding their own financially.



Such a chase of wages and costs and prices can be endless. The higher freight rates will enter the cost structure for coal and iron ore, which in turn will boost production costs of steel, and so on. The latest freight boost is not enough to force a rise in steel prices. But if on top of it, wages go up, then price rise might be unavoidable—despite assertions in the Robert R. Nathan report.

The Steel Fact-Finders have a great responsibility—just as Homer said. They will decide not only the wage level in steel, but in other industries. Walter Reuther's United Auto Workers and the Ford Motor Co. are marking time in Detroit awaiting the decision on steel. The United Packinghouse Workers Union (CIO) and the John Morrell Packing Co. agreed to extend their present contract to November 1 and continue negotiations. And John L. Lewis is likely to use the board's findings—if they suit his purpose—as a lever in coal negotiations.

Thus the board will influence, if not set, the pattern for a fourth round. A decision to increase wage costs would quickly filter throughout industry and the price structure. Either that, or, if the companies demur, it could generate a rash of strikes.

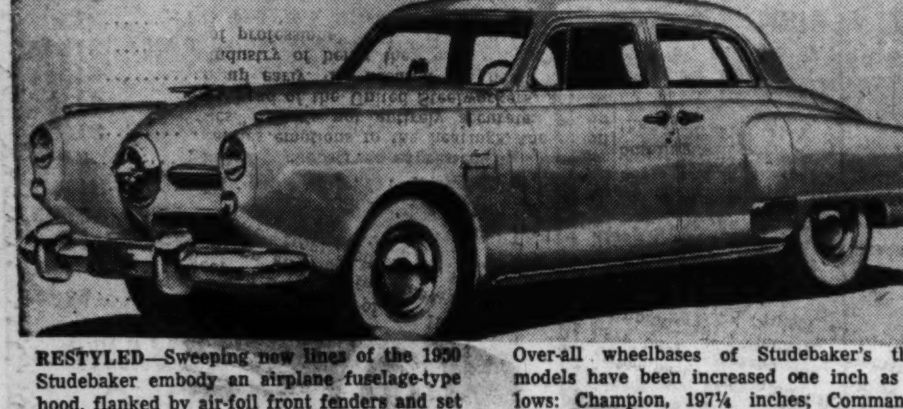
Studebaker Introduces 1950 Models



RESTYLED—Sweeping new lines of the 1950 Studebaker embody an airplane fuselage-type hood, flanked by air-foil front fenders and set off by a chrome "spinner." In addition to providing an ornamental touch, the "spinner" augments four frontal openings which direct air to the engine for maximum cooling. Over-all wheelbases of Studebaker's three models have been increased one inch as follows: Champion, 197¼ inches; Commander, 207⅞ inches, and Land Cruiser, 211⅞ inches. The 1950 cars will not be displayed until the week starting August 29 at Washington dealers' showrooms

Plans Listed For Northeast Bank Branch

By S. Oliver Goodman

Thomas J. Groom, president of Bank of Commerce & Savings, yesterday announced plans for a new branch bank at Fourth and Rhode Island ave. ne.

Construction will start November 1 and it is expected that the building will open for business in the early spring of 1950.

The new branch, Groom said, will be similar in most respects to the new Brightwood Branch building which was completed last June 6. It will have a large glass area on the street side, parking space in the rear, a circular driveway, a drive-in teller's window and a night depository.

Air-conditioned throughout, the branch will have all modern bank facilities, including a safe deposit vault. In the rear portion, which is to be two stories high, will be located a work room and service areas. A. Hamilton Wilson is the architect. Final plans and specifications are in the hands of contractors.

George E. Cole, assistant cashier who has been associated with Bank of Commerce & Savings since 1926, will be in charge of the new office which will be the bank's third branch.

WHO'S WHO TODAY: A Washington group of life insurance underwriters headed by Louis J. Grayson of Travelers is campaigning for the election of Jorn D. Marsh as a national trustee of the National Association of Life Underwriters . . . Warren Melhorn is now associated with Mace Properties, Inc., and Henry Eby has been named assistant treasurer of Southern Oxygen, Inc. Both are members of the Washington Chapter, National Association of Cost Accountants.

FESTIVE DAY: C. F. Armiger, Inc., Silver Spring, will entertain regional Reo mower dealers in Rock Creek Park on Wednesday.

ODD LOTS: Wisconsin Public Service Co. has registered with the Securities & Exchange Commission four million dollars of 30-year first-mortgage bonds . . . Louisville & Nashville Railroad has authorized the expenditure of approximately $600,000 for 100 new 70-ton steel hopper cars . . . Iron ore consumption in July totaled 5,258,321 tons compared with 6,248,535 tons in June, the Lake Superior Iron Ore Association reports.

NEW DIRECTOR: Richard Harte has been elected a director of National Steel Corp.

LOWER PROFITS: A survey of 185 manufacturers revealed that 75 per cent of them believe profits will be smaller this year than last. The National Industrial Conference Board, which conducted the survey, said that a "substantial number of companies are extremely pessimistic and look for declines of 25 per cent, 50 per cent and even net losses." The board said the manufacturers foresaw declining profits because of a lower volume of sales, inability to reduce operating costs adequately, inventory losses and lower selling prices. The board said that a number of companies who predicted lower profits in 1949 stressed that they considered their 1948 profits above normal and had not seriously expected to maintain such high levels.

Chicago Grain

Chicago, Aug. 20 (AP).—All commodities on the Board of Trade today closed the week on a strong note in active dealings. Soybeans again provided the feature, but wheat came ahead sharply in the closing minutes to regain the ground lost earlier this week.

The market got off to a dreary start. Everything was down except soybeans. As the session wore on, prices pushed ahead. There was a noticeable lack of selling pressure. In the closing minutes much buying came from local traders who had gone short earlier in the session.

Wheat closed 2 to 3 cents higher, corn was ¾ to 1½ higher, oats were ¼ to ⅝ higher, rye was 1¼ to 1½ higher, soybeans were 3¼ to 4¾ higher, and lard was unchanged to 10 cents 100 pounds higher.

Oil Industry To Have 90th Anniversary

Houston, Tex., Aug. 20 (AP).—Next Saturday is the ninetieth anniversary of the American oil industry.

On August 27, 1859—a Saturday—Edwin L. Drake, a railroad conductor by trade, used a tin pitcher to bail crude oil from the Nation's first oil well. That was at Titusville, Pa., which soon became one of the first oil boom towns.

Since then the oil industry has mushroomed into 26 States. More than 1,250,000 oil and gas wells have been drilled.

That first day in 1859 Drake took several barrels of crude from his discovery well. The American Petroleum Institute estimates that between then and the start of 1949 United States oil wells produced 37,098,791,000 barrels of crude.

Today there are approximately 34,000 domestic oil companies.

The oil man of today would laugh at the equipment used by Drake. A little six-horsepower engine powered steam for the crude drilling equipment between the 35-foot derrick.

Idea Not Drake's

Drake probably thought he had a deep hole when he reached a depth of 69½ feet the day he struck oil. Wells beyond 12,000 feet now have become common. One well has passed 20,000 feet.

The idea to drill for oil did not originate with Drake. It came from George Bissell, New Haven, Conn., who had an interest in a 100-acre tract near Titusville. He hired Drake to carry out the idea.

Nor was the crude oil taken from Drake's well the first produced. Small quantities of crude had been found in springs, water wells, and on the surface of streams. A few so-called refineries, which also processed oils from coal and shale, turned this initial production to commercial use.

Coal oil refineries continued to receive part of the Drake well production until January 22, 1861, when the first petroleum refinery began operations near Titusville.

Refinery Cost $15,000

This refinery cost about $15,000, a figure which would require much multiplying to permit construction of one of the multimillion-dollar plants of today.

Stockholder's Prize Contest Proves Helpful

Chicago, Aug. 20 (AP).—Motorola, Inc., not only welcomes suggestions from stockholders, it also offers a handsome prize for the best one received.

The television and radio manufacturing firm has inaugurated an annual "stockholder of the year" contest.

First winner is Edward T. Howell, 52, of Wilmington, Del., a research chemist with du Pont and one of Motorola's 2900 stockholders. He owns 100 shares.

His letter suggested the company should show greater recognition for the research and development men who actually account for behind-the-scenes product progress. This would serve to boost staff morale, he said, and at the same time encourage greater ingenuity and inventiveness.

His ideas won him an expenses-paid trip to Chicago with Mrs. Howell, a week's stay for them at the fashionable Edgewater Beach Hotel, and their choice of a 1950 television or radio console—Motorola, of course.

Howell agrees with the Motorola people that devices such as the contest he won will stimulate stockholder interest.

For its part, the company said, "Motorola has always believed that the important goal of democracy in business is a close and mutually beneficial relationship between organization and its stockholders."

HOW TO GET AHEAD WHILE SITTING DOWN

A Suggestion from The WALL STREET JOURNAL

The minutes you spend sitting in buses, waiting for trains, waiting for appointments—why not make these minutes profitable by keeping a copy of The Wall Street Journal handy? It takes only a few minutes now and then in a day to absorb the high spots in The Journal. Those few minutes may give you a money-making idea or a timely warning that will make the difference between a profit or a loss in your business.

To get ahead in the next 12 months, it is important for you to understand the far-reaching changes that are taking place all over America. New inventions, new industries and new ways of doing business are creating new opportunities for men who want to increase their incomes.

The Wall Street Journal tells you about these things. The Journal is more than a newspaper. It is a daily guide for every substantial citizen. Its readers include many of the wealthiest people in this country. Yet The Journal can also be of enormous help to men in the $5,000 to $20,000 income bracket.

The Journal has the largest staff of writers on business and finance. It is the only business paper served by all four big press associations. It comes to you DAILY. It costs $20 a year, but you can get a Trial Subscription for 3 months for $6—77 issues (in U.S. and Possessions). Just tear out this ad and attach check for $6 and mail. Or tell us to bill you. Slower Stock Gains No Bar To Enthusiasm

New York, Aug. 20 (AP).—It was a tight squeeze, but the stock market this week ended higher for the ninth straight week of the summer rally.

The net gain was the smallest for any of the nine weeks, and at one time the market was within only a short distance of the 1949 peak.

The failure of stocks to break through the top didn't dim the enthusiasm of Wall Street for the rise which has brought more than a dozen one million share-trading days: After all, brokers earn a living on commissions charged for buying or selling securities.

The rise also represents their estimate of the outlook for business. In other words they still think business is on the upgrade now or very shortly will be.

The head man in Wall Street, Emil Schram, president of the New York Stock Exchange, saw President Truman in the White House and reported an improvement in business.

Sought Tax Revision

What he really went to see the President about was to ask for changes in the tax laws that would give a better break to the investor. His voice was added to those of others who recently have been advocating tax law revision.

At a press conference the President said he wasn't against an overhaul in taxes provided enough money was raised to run the Government. That sounded good to Wall Street ears which—according to their own accounts—have been beaten down for some time by statements coming from a variety of Washington sources.

There was another element projected into the Wall Street scene this week that created a lot of discussion. The Stock Exchange reported the short interest as of August 15 stood at 2,006,119 shares, the geratest in about 17 years.

Department store sales were down 16 per cent last week under a year ago. That's not too good, but merchants—and investors—are looking for a pick up after Labor Day. All retail sales, on the other hand, are only slightly under a year ago and are higher than the previous week.

The public isn't buying right now at retail, but the businessman is buying to build up his inventories against the time when the consumer starts to spend.

Oil companies took heart from the increase in crude production allowed in Texas starting in September. Most of them can use the additional supplies of crude because their inventories have been whittled down to manageable size. In the East, major companies started raising home heating fuel and Diesel oil prices.

The interest in gold shares perked up late in the week with a renewal of discussions over Britain's dollar crisis and whether among oher solutions there might emerge a rise in the price of gold from the present $35 a fine ounce set by the United States Treasury and used as the world's yardstick.

Government Blamed For Cotton Shortage

Fall River, Mass., Aug. 20 (AP).—The Federal Government's freezing of staple cotton was blamed for a scarcity today by leaders in the fine goods textile industry which employs about 12,000 here in 10 mills.

Industry heads, who would not be quoted by name, said they were considering appeals for aid to the Government.

They reported no "free" cotton in the market and said their warehouses were nearly empty of it.

1 LUGGAGE TRAILER
2 BATHINETTE
3 PLAYPEN

Mrs. Richard C. Ball of 800 S. Florida Street, Arlington, is one lady who's learned the quick, profitable way to dispose of surplus articles.

Not long ago Mrs. Ball wanted to sell a luggage trailer. She placed a want ad in The Washington Post and found a buyer the very first day.

Soon her youngest baby outgrew his bathinette. That too was easily sold through The Post.

And last week Mrs. Ball offered readers a playpen her children no longer used. She asked $12.50 and received exactly that—in fact, in all three cases she got the price named.

"We had many replies to each of the ads," says Mrs. Ball, "I'll use The Post every time for a quick sale."

Take a tip from this experienced user. Get cash for unneeded household articles through a result-getting Post want ad. For service call NA. 4200 and ask for an ad writer.

New U. S. Treasurer's Ability and Charm Winning Prestige for Women

Photos by Harris & Ewing

IN HER big office on the second floor of the Treasury Department, Mrs. Georgia Neese Clark, Treasurer of the United States, holds daily conferences with members of her department. There's nothing formal about these meetings and all feel free to exchange ideas and offer suggestions. The get-togethers are held shortly after Mrs. Clark arrives at her office which is usually before 9 a. m.

Georgia Neese Clark Has Scored Hits As Actress, Farmer, Businesswoman

By Marie McNair

GEORGIA NEESE CLARK, first woman Treasurer of the United States, is doing a man-sized job like a man.

In fact, it's been her lot in life to tackle jobs heretofore considered only suited to the "superior" sex. She heads the Richland (Kans.) Bank; she runs a grain elevator; has actively managed 13 farms, and has played minor political roles for almost 20 years. But these stout-hearted tasks came to her only after she'd realized a girlhood ambition—to be on the stage. A student at Sargent's Drama School in New York, Georgia Neese later trouped with such old-time favorites as May Robson, Pauline Frederick, Donald Brian and Florence Reed. She played, too, with Violet Heming, with whom she expects to renew her friendship now that Miss Heming (Mrs. Bennett Champ Clark) has returned from a European trip.

A man's mind guides the feminine United States Treasurer in the routine dealings of her day. The dozen or so men whose activities she directs find that working for a woman isn't so bad after all. In fact, they like it.

Morning conferences with their chief which begin the day are apt to be informal affairs with a free exchange of ideas among the group.

Rises in the Truman Tradition

MRS. CLARK'S day actually begins around 7:15 a. m., when she opens up the blinds in her pleasant but small apartment at 2800 Woodley rd. Slipping on a gingham housedress, she makes her own coffee and toast, sips a glass of fruit juice, reads the two morning papers. By 8:30 she's dressed and on her way to the Treasury Department. As she keeps no car in Washington, and has no Government limousine at her disposal, Mrs. Clark has arranged with George, the apartment doorman, to have a taxi at the door every morning.

An average of 10 visitors are received by the United States Treasurer every day, the number kept down by two efficient secretaries. The mail is tremendous—several thousand letters being received each day. Here again, her secretary weeds out only the most important for her boss to read.

Extremely pretty, with slim ankles and brown hair threaded with grey, Georgia Neese Clark has a heart as big as the State of Kansas, where she was born. She's fast making friends in this town of ours; lunches and dines out often, informally. Knowing something of the Washington whirl, she's building up a reserve strength during the lazy summer months for what's ahead of her when the season is actually on.

If there are no engagements on her calendar she often brings work home from the office, finishes it up after a simple meal which she has cooked herself. She catches up with the news on those nights with the evening paper. And if she's very tired, a good detective story is the surest way to send her off to pleasant dreams.

She's an Absentee Shopper, by Proxy

CLOTHES are no problem to the new Government official. She's been shopping in Kansas City and Topeka for so long that the sales clerks know her style, keep an eye out for what they think she'd like. The other day her milliner sent her a wire saying she would like to name a hat for her. With a penchant for pretty hats, Mrs. Clark is sure to accept.

Now that her interests and activities will lie in Washington for the next few years at least, Mrs. Clark is forced to relinquish active control of much of her properties in the West. She has engaged a farm agent to manage her vast acres. Recently she received a report of what had been done. He was doing so well that, woman-like, she remarked: "You know, I was just a little bit piqued."

AN EARLY RISER, the first woman Treasurer of the United States dons a gingham house frock and apron, puts on the coffee for her habitually light breakfast

AS SHE SIPS fruit juice and coffee, munches a piece of toast, Mrs. Clark has time to read the morning papers in the dinette of her apartment. Then she changes from gingham to a two-piece linen and...

SHE'S READY by 8:45 for the taxi which George, the apartment doorman, has waiting at the door. Debating about bringing her car to Washington, Mrs. Clark meantime flags down taxis to go places

WHEN she closes the door of her office at the end of the day, Mrs. Clark is apt to yield to the invitation of a friend to come by and have a drink, or a cup of tea. Here she stops in to see Mrs. Robert Olds (standing), meets Alvin P. Adams (left) of New York and Beverly Hills

Bevin, Cripps To Be Feted Here

By Elizabeth Maguire

FORTHCOMING currency conversations will occasion a number of parties. Sir Stafford Cripps, British Chancellor of the Exchequer, and Ernest Bevin, British Foreign Secretary, are expected in Washington about September 2, when they will be guests at the British Embassy.

Whether Lady Cripps will accompany Sir Stafford is still undecided, but Mrs. Bevin is definitely expected. Sir Stafford and the Foreign Secretary are coming for dollar-sterling talks and will also attend the fourth annual meeting of the board of governors of the International Bank and the International Monetary Fund, starting September 13.

Representatives of 48 countries will attend the conference, which this year is headed by French Minister of Finance Maurice Petsche. An important social schedule has been arranged but no dates have been given out. The president of the World Bank, Eugene Black, and the managing director of the Monetary Fund, Camille Gutt, will give a reception; the French Embassy will probably entertain. A large party also will be given by United States officials.

Koo-Yang Wedding in New York

THE Chinese Ambassador and Mme. Koo attended the wedding yesterday of the Ambassador's eldest son, Teh-Chang Koo, and beautiful Miss Gertrude Kwang Hwa Yang, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Yang Ho-Ching of New York City. The wedding took place in a chapel at St. Bartholomew's, New York, and was followed by a reception at Essex House.

This week the young couple are coming to Washington, and Mme. Koo is planning a reception in their honor. After a visit here, Teh-Chang and his bride will go to Siam to live.

Motoring to Luxembourg

WHEN Mrs. Mesta, U. S. Minister to Luxembourg, arrives in France, she will drive from Paris to Luxembourg. The journey by train takes about six hours, and by motor about 8 hours.

Luxembourg is noted for its roses, its rolling hills and the beautiful Moselle Valley. It is a garden spot of Europe, and in its Ardennes Forest wild boar is hunted as in medieval days. Pheasant shooting is another favorite sport of the country.

Notes From Embassy Row

WASHINGTON's most glamorous Ambassador, Jeronimo Remorino, is expected back in town soon after a visit in the Argentine.

Rumors that he will go to Paris are still denied at the embassy. When he was here, the Ambassador made news: (1) in a rumored romance with recently divorced Nina Lunn; (2) by challenging

Mrs. Collins Has Been in Army Since She Was 1 Year Old

By Norma Lanum

MRS. J. LAWTON COLLINS, whose husband is the new Army Chief of Staff, has been an Army daughter, Army wife or Army mother ever since she was 1 year old.

She was married in an Army chapel; her three children all were born on Army posts, and she's been traipsing between Army post homes as long as she can remember.

But no one loves the Army life more than pretty brunette Gladys Collins.

Make Many Friends

"The most wonderful thing about being with the Army," she says, "is that you make so many steadfast friends. When you and an Army post neighbor of many years back meet on some new post, the friendship naturally takes up right where you left off."

Mrs. Collins collects favorite recipes of her Army post friends. On each one she writes the friend's name, the post where they met and the date.

Occasionally when she renews a friendship with the originator of one of the recipes, Mrs. Collins will have the service wife in for dinner and surprises her with the dish.

Her family ranks first in Mrs. Collins' interests, which is to be expected since both she and the general come from large, closely knit clans. She is one of six children and the general has 10 brothers and sisters.

But now the Collins children, Lieut. Joseph Easterbrook, Gladys and Nancy, are grown and the general's wife is able to devote more time to studying international relations.

The keenly intelligent Mrs. Collins, a Phi Beta Kappa from the University of Washington, feels the world's nations can live together in peace if the peoples themselves can become more personally acquainted with one another.

Retracing His Step

Her recent trip to Europe with General Collins might have helped to broaden this theory. Last June the general took his wife and daughter, Nancy, along with him on a motor trip across Europe.

What made the trip so excit-

Marriage Has Been Perfect Until Now, But Wife's Ambitious Desire to Have Husband Set Himself Up in Business Causes Tension

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I love my wife, always have, and could not picture life without her. And she loves me, I know—or did. We've had fun and our relationship has been—well, perfect, up to now. But my dear wife is too ambitious for me; and I haven't known what to do or where to turn for a year or more.

Jennie, I'm afraid, thinks I could succeed in anything I tried; and she wants me to start in business for myself, and wants to put our joint savings in the venture—a considerable amount. She keeps bringing up the subject constantly.

As a matter of fact I have an excellent job, paying a very high salary with generous bonuses, and promise of even better advancement as time goes on. And our family life, while not materialistic in any way, has been as good or better than any of our "well-off" neighbors.

He Prefers Life Free From Strain

WE'VE HAD a good life, without strain, and without trying or being interested in "keeping up with the Joneses." And at 37, I can't see throwing over so much for an uncertain investment. I have no "drive" to boss everything; and I believe you shouldn't jeopardize your family's future to assume such a responsibility.

I know Jennie dotes on your column and from what I've seen, it's the straight goods—so I would appreciate your comment on our situation, if you please. C. B.

Civilized Natures Don't Care to Boss

DEAR C. B.: It is a civilized trait, also a mark of social health and emotional maturity, not to want to boss everything, for it means that one is not "traumatically" afraid of life and people and the consequences of unfolding events; and thus one tends to let others express themselves in their own way, without undue anxiety.

And yet on the other hand, dread of "heading up" big undertakings, where the outcome would depend largely on one's own resources, directive skills, energies and foresight— this type of diffidence isn't an aspect of mature healthy character. Rather it refers to childish timidity and chronic fear of failure and criticism; and if these attitudes are latent in a person who tries to be an executive, he usually fails dismally. after haplessly causing a lot of dissension in his working environment.

Your manner of speaking, added to what you say, suggests to me that you are a mixture of both types; that you have an inherently civilized temperament, hence never would want to be an autocrat; but that also, due to early emotional conditioning, you are rather excessively dependent on "approval" and afraid of criticism.

Better Be Boss in This, However

THUS IT seems unlikely that you could successfully occupy the driver's seat in a business of your own; and I think the strain of trying to do it, merely to oblige an ambitious wife, would take heavy toll of your general health; and a compulsive breakdown, to escape the assignment, might be the outcome—ushering in bankruptcy about the same time.

Your gracious devotion to your wife seems almost more filial than conjugal; and she in turn is treating you as a child, taking a "mother knows best" sort of attitude in trying to make a capitalist of you. And in a velvety way, she has become an intolerable nagger on this score, spoiling a previously happy companionship.

The very qualities which unsuit you for management "drive" also handicap you in relation to Jennie's ambitious nudging, and my advice is to take leave of native temperament long enough to declare yourself boss in this matter at least. Tell her the idea is "out." You don't want to hear any more of it. M. H.

Mary Haworth counsels through her column, not by mail or personal interview. Write her in care of The Washington Post.

The Family Scrapbook

By Dr. Ernest G. Osborne

In these days of small dwellings children need to be able to move through the house. We can hardly shut them out of any part of the family's living quarters. And most of us don't want to. But we do face a problem, especially when they are very young. Children have to learn to be careful. They aren't born that way. A delicate piece of bric-a-brac means little more than solid wooden book end and will be treated as roughly.

If living-room furniture and decorations weren't made for rough-and-tear usage, we may need to do a little "child-proofing." Here are just a few suggestions that may point the way to a thorough job:

Substitute heavy glass ash trays for handsomer but more fragile ones. See that there are no top-heavy lamps. Use table lamps that can be kept out of reach or floor lamps that have a heavy base, preventing easy tipping. Put false plugs in the reachable floor or wall outlets so youngsters can't poke into them. Such plugs can be easily made of a regular plug from which the wire has been removed and hole stopped with plastic wood or other plastic material. Work out a simple lattice arrangement that can be placed over the lower book shelves. If you have fine furniture, protect it with loose slip covers of heavy material that can easily be removed when guests are coming.

These make a beginning. Other ideas which "child-proof" the living room but still letave it livable will doubtless occur to you.

Highlights From Tour Of Europe

By Genevieve Reynolds

WHEREVER she went in Europe — Italy, France Spain, Belgium, Holland or Luxembourg—Mrs. Allen J. Ellender, wife of the Louisiana Senator, ran into flocks of American tourists. Largest numbers encountered were in Italy.

In the middle of Rome, she was amazed to see an Alabama-licensed bus jammed with all ages of Alabamans, having the time of their lives.

Mrs. Ellender, who returned recently from a 35-day stay on the Continient, in the British Isles and in Ireland, thinks every United States citizen should visit "the Old Country." It was her first trip but she intends to go again. She accompanied the Senator to Rome, where he attended the International Health Conference of the U.N. as an adviser. While he threshed out world health problems, she toured art galleries, cathedrals and other points of interest.

Italians, she said, went out of their way to answer tourist's questions. Instead of pointing directions, they would scoot ahead on bicycles, escorting her to the exact spot. Describing the country as a vast garden, she observed verdant fields of vegetables, fruits and other crops throughout the land.

One of the highlights of the Elenders' stay was a special audience with Pope Pius in the Vatican.

Legation Readied for Mrs. Mesta

DURING her stay in Luxembourg Mrs. Ellender observed that the United States legation was being readied for its new Minister, Mrs. George Mesta. The walls and ceilings had been painted snow-white. An iron fence surrounds the official residence, which she termed "more cozy and attractive that palatial." Mrs. Mesta now is en route to assume her post.

"A visit to Ireland lifts you out of this world," she exclaims. Food is plentiful and the people are gay, with a refreshing outlook on life, she found. "I kissed the famous Blarney Stone, she chuckled, with a twinkle in her greenish-brown eyes.

According to Mrs. Ellender, the British maintain a brave front but underneath are weary and discouraged over their austere lives and years of short rations. Yet they, as well as Italians, French, Hollanders and others, are conscious of and appreciative of American aid.

Prices were so high in all countries that she confined her purchases to perfume, which she found very reasonable in Paris.

Canasta or Barsoviana Now

ONE OF the busiest women in the Nation's Capital is Mrs. Norris Poulson, wife of the California Representative.

About six weeks ago a New Yorker taught her to play "Canasta," which she describes as "a combination of gin rummy, poker, bridge and pinochle." Since then she's been teaching the game to congressional wives and most of the other residents of the Congressional Hotel. Mrs. P. is credited with introducing the game here.

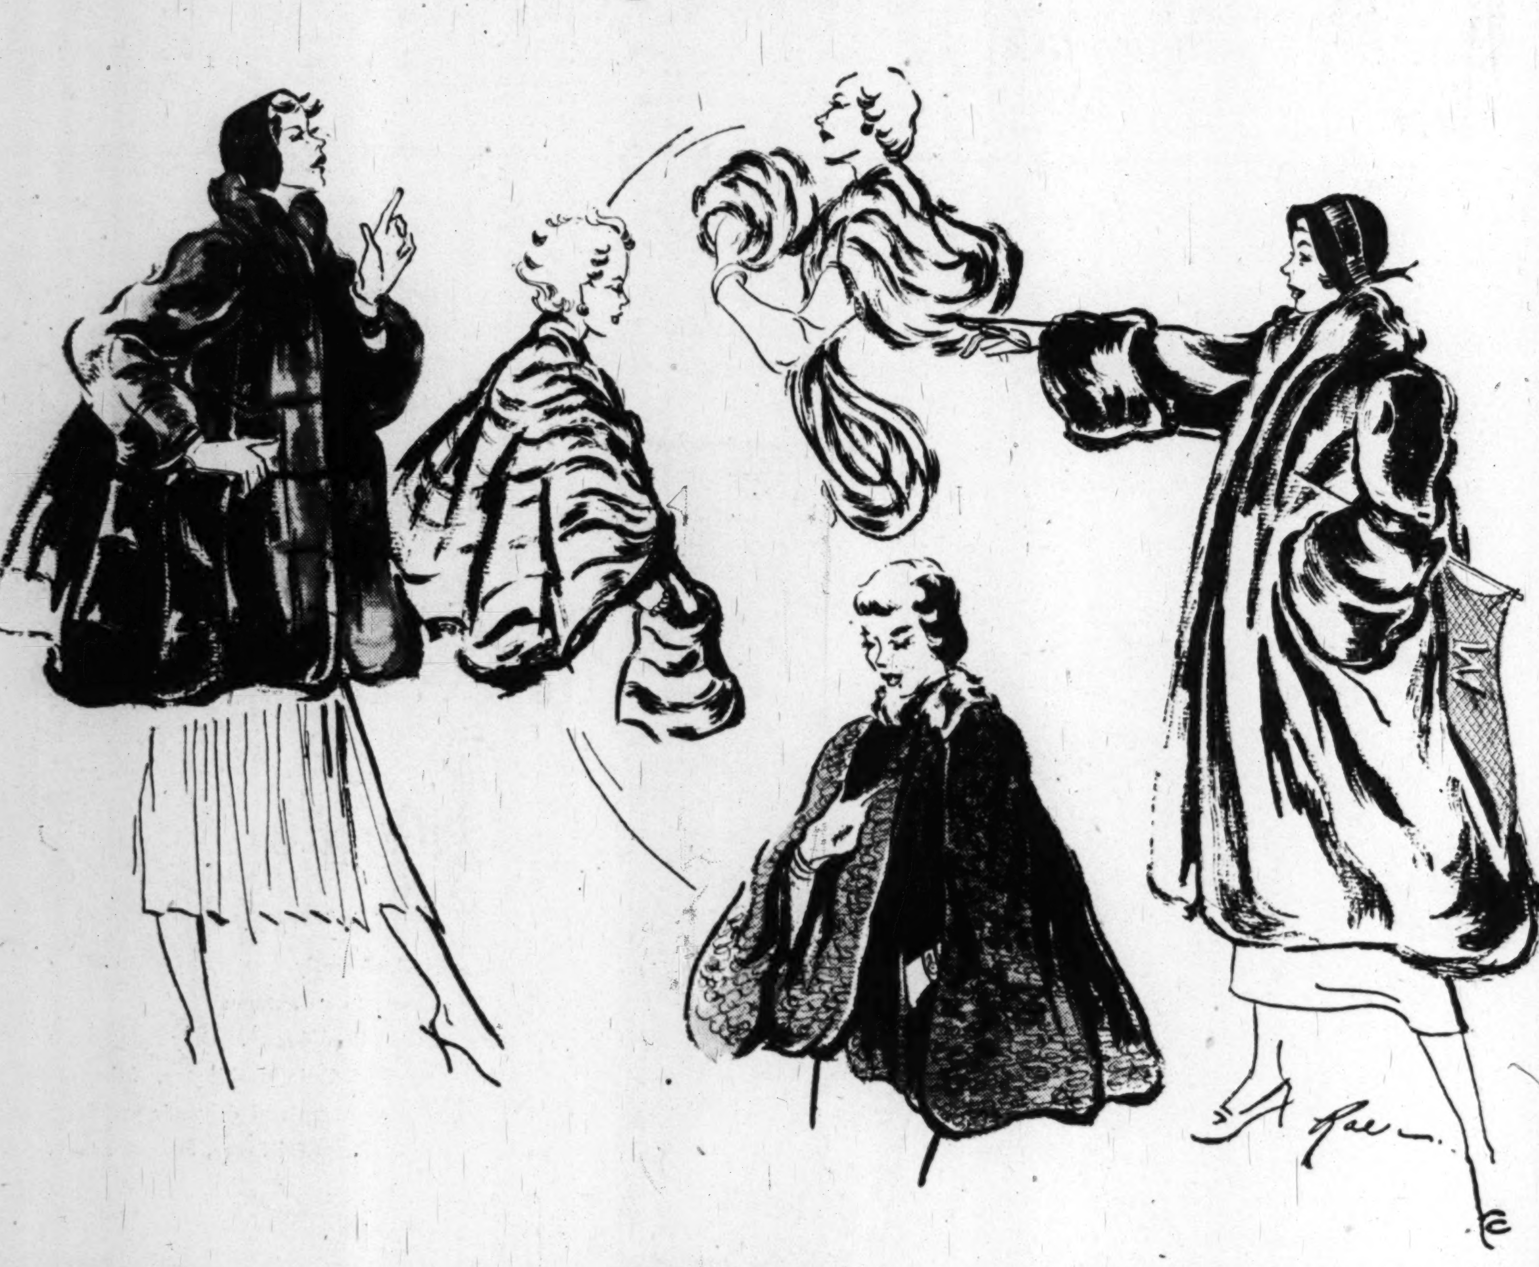
A few days ago when Mrs. Dennis Chavez, wife of the New Mexico Senator, had a few Senate wives to tea, Mrs. Poulson was called in to instruct them all in the popular new game.

Mrs. Edward J. Thye, wife of the Minnesota Senator, and Mrs. Antonio M. Fernandez, wife of the New Mexico Representative, are among her most constant canasta companions.

Mrs. Fernandez and her husband introduced the "Barsoviana" dance in Washington a couple of years ago. Sometimes termed the "Texas Polka," because it's a favorite of the Lone Star State steppers, the tune of "Put Your Little Foot" now is a favorite with Congressmen and their wives. The Fernandzes taught the legislators the steps during congressional dance lessons recently.

Polish noblemen first introduced the Barsoviana at the Spanish court. It became so popular that it swept Spain and, later, all the Latin American countries, where it has survived for generations, according to Mrs. Fernandez.

It's a Year of Big Colors and Little Furs



MARY'S LITLE LAMB—muskrat, mole or mink—is being done up in the fanciest colors ever this year. And, joy of joys, it costs less too! Over there on the right, for instance, is a honey of a buy in navy blue dyed muskrat. It's jaunty, young and all set to make news hereabouts. You'll find it at Garfinckel's, along with the winsome set of "little" furs at top center, consisting of a shoulder-length cape-stole and barrel muff in ranch mink. At left center is a heavenly Silver-blu mink cape stole with two large pockets marking it as an important piece. Silky black Persian broadtail makes the hip-length cape-jacket, at bottom center. Its Peter Pan collar is of mink. Both of these garments are from Jandel's. Off at left and demanding plenty of attention is a sheared raccoon, darling of the college crowd. Cut with the right amount of swagger and dash, it may be found at Zirkin's. Lengths, as you can see, are as you find them this season. Anything goes, and you've only yourself to please

This is the third of a series of 10 articles on fall fashion trends.

By Peggy Preston

DID YOU buy a fur coat last year? If so, read no further. You'll just get mad. Because that exact coat costs approximately 25 per cent less today.

That's what the man said—the local fur merchant who fingered a silky mink, and mused sadly, "Fur prices are way down—at least 25 per cent, and in some cases more than that."

Well, come what may, let's get on the ball while we still have a few coins in our jeans, ankle down to a nice, air-cooled shop and see what goes in the fur coat division.

It's a revelation, really. Aside from the price drop, we mean. For Mary's little lamb—muskrat, mole, lapin, seal or mink—has been tinted in as many shades as there were in Joseph's coat of Biblical fame. Lengths are as varied as the colors, and a fur wrap today can stop anywhere between the elbow and the shin bone. It's a year of big colors and little furs.

Navy blue dyed furs, popularized a few years ago by Esther Dorothy, are a high fashion note now, threatening to overshadow black as the Nation's favorite coat color. Locally, a few shops are featuring the color in muskrat, mole, or in the inexpensive lapin division. Beige, too, is favored in Washington, and one finds it in muskrat, lapin, and in the luxurious mutation minks.

In New York, It's Strawberry

NEW YORK fur stylists have gone further by tossing in strawberry tinted moleskin, and taupe-toned broadtail. But our town, conservative in fashion, is being a little more restrained in its offering of unusually tinted furs.

The mutation minks are still the darlings of the luxury trade, but many of them are considerably less expensive this year than last. The exquisite Silver-blu mutation, for instance, has climbed down from its price-pedestal and today costs about the same as traditional mink. A stole-cape, which two years ago was $3500, this year is about $1450.

Reason for the price drop is the old one of supply and demand. Mutations, once rare and expensive, are now being produced in ample quantities and the price has come down accordingly.

New mutations, such as the beautiful beige and gray called "Breath of Spring," are more expensive. Several short capes of these furs are being shown locally.

Full length garments are rather scarce hereabouts. The majority of coats are being shown in the ⅞ length, about two inches above the hemline or the dress; or in ¾ length. Then, there are scores of jackets and cape, cut still shorter. Stoles are here in larger quantities than ever and many women are investing in handsome mink or Persian lamb pieces to throw over a basic winter coat or suit.

Raccoon Stages Comeback

FOX and leopard appear to be the only type of fur not around in abundance this season. Raccoon is staging a big comeback and is in for a good run with the college and young business girl. But it isn't the old-fashioned raccoon of the '20s. Today's version is "sheared," clipped of its long hair, and has become as soft and fluffy as a lamb's wool. You have to look twice to tell it from beaver.

Down-to-earth muskrat is being treated in new and interesting ways so that it takes on an upper-bracket look, and that old reliable, the mouton, is still in the picture for the girl with a budget problem.

Linings are being given considerable attention. Iridescent taffeta is going into expensive Persian lamb jackets, and contrasting taffeta is sometimes put on the tinted fur coats. Belts, pockets, buttons, braid are some of the trimmings being used.

Persian lamb, in both black and gray, frequently mink trimmed: broadtail, sheared beaver, seal, squirrel are but a few of the fur favorites for fall. The variety in styles, lengths, colors and textures have never been greater. And at such nice prices, too!

Mrs. Rees Stephens Entertains at Luncheon for Daughter

Mrs. Rees Stephens entertained yesterday at a luncheon at the Congressional Club for her daughter, Mrs. John Blodgett. The wife of the Second Secretary at the United States Embassy in Stockholm, Mrs. Blodgett is visiting here with her two children, Diana and Stephens.

Luncheon guests yesterday were Mrs. Robert Hecksher, Mrs. Hal Crane, Mrs. Charles Randall, Mrs. Robert Leavitt, Miss Ruth von Brandt, Miss Katherine Leadbetter, Mrs. James McFarland and Miss Trimble Sawtelle.

Tobe' Says:
"Fur Liners" Good Buys

Do you realize that fur-lined coats are not only a top winter coat fashion, but a wonderful "buy" as well? Yes—they are tax free!

You can buy a fur-lined coat at almost any price you want —mink and nutria linings if you can afford them, black Persian, muskrat and sheared raccoon for considerably less; American broadtail, Tingona lamb, and leopard stenciled lapins at medium and budget prices. You can have a dressy or a casual "fur-liner"; whichever best suits you.

Rehoboth Roundup

Renowned Artist to Hail Beach Art Colony Growth

By Virginia Cullen

REHOBOTH BEACH, Del., Aug. 20.—An internationally famous artist, Alfred Jouniaux, former Belgian court painter, who has done outstanding work in this country, is paying tribute to the growing art colony of Rehoboth Beach. The Rehoboth Art League has secured permission to exhibit his paintings next Wednesday. He now has studios in San Francisco and in Washington.

Heading the committee on arrangements is Mrs. T. Roland Humphreys of Montclair, N. J., while the pictures will be hung by Mr. John E. Merkel. Concurrent with the Jouniaux exhibit is the two-man show of two Wilmington artists, Eugenia Rhoads and Jeanne Sala, members of the studio group of that city. Mrs. Sala will return from a European visit in September, and Mrs. of two Wilmington artists, Eugenia Rhoads, and Jeanne Sala, members of The Studio Group of that city. Mrs. Sala will return from a European visit in September, and Mrs. Rhoads and her daughter, Judy, arrived here Friday at The Corner Cupboard Inn on Park Avenue, to hang her pictures.

Mrs. Arthur C. Dezendorf of Washington, who is occupying her resort cottage, "The Clover Patch" in the Acres, was hostess at the annual Junior Costume Party held Wednesday afternoon for some 75 young people of the resort. This is the third party Mrs. Dezendorf has conducted. She was assisted by Mrs. Y. V. Allnutt of Chevy Chase, Md.; Mrs. Carl Wieland of Rehoboth, and Miss Frances B. Oler, instructor of the junior art class.

Mrs. Elinor Thompson Donaldson, Washington landscape architect, will give the last of a series of lectures before the Art League's new garden course class next Wednesday. She will talk on "Gardening in the Mid-Atlantic States; Designs that reflect our cultural heritage." Mrs. Donaldson, who is the daughter of one of this resort's best-known pioneer colonists, the late Mrs. Henry D. Thompson of "Mon Plaisir" and Greenville, Del., has contributed much of her expert advice to the clubwomen of the Villiage Improvement Association here, in perpetuating her mother's great interest in the resort.

Next Thursday evening Mr. Thornton Oakley of Villanova, Pa., and his writer wife, Amy, will be the guests of Col. and Mrs. Wilbur S. Corkran at The Homestead. Mr. Oakley, one of Pennsylvania's best-known painters, will talk that night before the Artists Sketch Group. All local and visiting artists are invited to hear him. He was in on the founding of the Rehoboth league back in 1938 when he dedicated the first studio building, The Paynter House, in company with the widow of the distinguished Delaware artist, Howard Pyle.

In municipal affairs the town awoke to find a new mayor had been elected for the next two years. Col. Carleton B. Shaffer, incumbent since 1947, was defeated by J. Arthur Downing, local contractor. However, the new city fathers don't take over the reins of Government until September 10.

M. H. Silverthorns Plan a Reunion

Maj. Gen. M. H. Silverthorn, USMC, and Mrs. Silverthorn, are having a family reunion this month with the arrival of their son and daughter-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Silverthorn of Norman, Okla. who will be here for a month; their other son and daughter-in-law, Capt. M. H. Silverthorn, jr., USMC, and Mrs. Silverthorn of Quantico, Va., and a third son, Lieut. Russell Silverthorn of Chicago., who will spend two weeks with his parents.

General and Mrs. Silverthorn entertained at dinner in their honor last evening and have issued invitations for a cocktail party on Friday, August 26.

Miss Cox to Honor Miss Smith, Fiance at Tea Today

Miss Evelyn Bolling Cox will be hostess this afternoon at a tea for Miss Catherine Hooe Smith and Warren Spratley, whose wedding will take place September 24 at St. Paul's Church.

Assisting the hostess will be Miss Margaret Woodhouse, Mrs. Frederick Pfeiffer and Miss Dorothy Washington, the latter a sister of Miss Cox's fiance, Lawrence Washington.

Miss Cox and Mr. Washington will be married in October in historic Christ Church, Alexandria.

The Service Set

ing—and enlightening—for Mrs. Collins was the fact that they followed the same route over which the general had led his troops of the Seventh Corps from Normandy's Utah Beach into Germany.

Time's Footprints Retraced

The Collins family sailed from Plymouth, England, the same port from which the invasion convoy carried the general's troops in the very early hours of D-Day, just five years previously. And they followed the Seventh Corps' route through Cherbourg, up into Belgium, over to Liege, where the troops of "Lightnin' Joe" Collins held out against Gen. Von Rundstedt in the "Battles of the Bulge," and across the Rhine into Germany.

All along the way Mrs. Collins was deeply impressed by the warm reception the villagers gave them.

Climax of the memorable trip was a visit to the old Kaiser Palace in Coblenz, which had been used as a chapel by the American armies. It was here that Capt. Joe Collins married the chaplain's daughter, Gladys Easterbrook, 28 years ago. Chaplain Edmund P. Easterbrook, who was later to become the Chief of Army Chaplains, performed the service for his daughter and son-in-law.

The young captain, who was serving with the occupation forces following World War I, met his bride, a secretary of the Inter-Allied Rhineland Commission, at a dance a year before.

Family Settled Now

Now the Collins family, except for young Joe who is stationed at Fort Bragg, are settled at their home at Quarters 8, Fort McNair. And they'll remain there while General Collins serves as Chief of Staff.

Customarily the Chief of Staff occupies the larger house at No. 1, Fort Myer. But the former staff chief, Gen. Omar Bradley, will stay there in his new capacity as Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

"Thank goodness I won't have to make another move," Mrs. Collins sighs. The only advantage the Fort Myer house might have over her own is that it lends itself more freely to formal entertaining.

The white-trimmed red brick house at Fort McNair has a cool breeze from Washington Channel, and a wide and "very livable" porch stretching across the back of the house. "We sleep five there when we have company," Mrs. Collins says gaily.

In New York

Mrs. J. Floyd Cissell, Mr. and Mrs. William N. Denton, jr., Miss Jane A. Manning, Miss Jean McDermott, Mrs. Ernest Gichner, Lawrence E. Gichner, Mrs. James M. Andrews, Mrs. Carmen Salvador, Mr. and Mrs. E. H. Ward and Miss Ruth E. McMurray of Washington are at the Barbizon-Plaza Hotel in New York City.

To Canada

The Ambassador of Pakistan, M. A. M. Ispahani with Mme. Ispahani and their family left on Wednesday for a motor trip to Canada. They will be back the end of the month.

Glogau

MRS. JAMES ANDREW GRAHAM, the former Miss Patricia Nell Beebe, was married at 12 noon yesterday in Olney, Md. The Rev. Guy E. Kagey of Baltimore performed the ceremony at St. John's Church. The bride is the daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Steven O. Beebe of Sandy Spring, Md., and Washington. The bridegroom, an Army lieutenant, is the son of Mr. and Mrs. George L. Graham of Long Island, N. Y. Following the reception on the lawn of the Beebe home, the newlyweds left for Fort Benning, Ga. They will leave from there shortly for the lieutenant's new post in Yokohama, Japan

Edward M. Davises Welcomed Here

Newcomers to Naval circles in Washington are Lieut. Comdr. Edward M. Davis 3d, USNR, and Mrs. Davis, who have come with their four children from Norfolk, Va. They are residing at 103 W. Leland st., Chevy Chase.

Before being recalled to active duty as Curator for the Navy Department, Commander Davis was director of the Norfolk Museum of Arts and Sciences. A native of Philadelphia, Commander Davis has been named director of the Naval Historical Foundation's Truxton-Decatur Naval Museum to be opened in January.

How Best to Store, Save Ninon Curtains

I have some ninon curtains which have only been in use for a few months. I don't need them any longer but would like to know if there is a satisfactory way to store them. If they have a tendency to fall apart, I would rather give them away while in good condition. W. N.

These curtains should keep well for several years if prepared correctly for storage. First, they should be washed to remove all soil and starch and thoroughly dried. When folding them, lay folds of tissue paper at the creases to avoid formation of sharp folds. Lay in a large, sturdy box which has been lined with tissue paper. Do not place too many curtains in one box. When the box is full, cover with tissues, several layers of newspapers and sprinkle with napthalene flakes generously over the top to discourage silver fish which sometimes eat rayons. Tightly close and tie the box and place it in dry storage where it will not be subjected to extremely high temperatures.

Can you give me instructions for preserving baby's kid shoes in bronze? J. M. E.

Because bronzing shoes requires special equipment, it cannot be done satisfactorily at home. I suggest you turn this job over to some one who does the work professionally. Jewelry stores, and jewelery repair departments in some department stores will arrange to have the work done for you.

Recently my little girl spilled cherry juice on a pink chambray pinafore. I sponged the spot immediately and it turned black. I'd appreciate any help you may offer me to remove this stain. E. M. M.

If the stain has not been washed in soap and water, stretch the stained portion over a large bowl and pour boiling water onto the stain from a height of 2 or three feet. This treatment can be continued as long as improvement is noticed.

PETUNIA!

On viewing my gravy
I'm filled with chagrin
It's always disgustingly
Lumpy—and thin!

If you'd use plain pancake flour for thickening, Petunia, it would be the right consistency . . . and delightfully smooth in texture.

Bishop-Bracken

If this doesn't remove the stain, then it will be necessary to use a bleach, but be sure to test the effect of the bleach on the pink color before applying to the stain. One way to apply the bleach is fill a bowl full of hot water, dip the stain into it and then stretch the stained area over the bowl. Drip chlorine bleach, mixed with an equal part of water, onto the stain with an eye dropper. Allow to act a minute and rinse in the water well to stop the action. Repeat if stain is lightened and color is unaffected.

Can you help me eliminate the stains made by Japanese beetles lighting on my clothes while out on the line? They are small rust-like spots which don't come out when treated with lemon juice or household bleach. P. G. R.

As a word of encouragement, the Japanese beetle season is over in this area about the middle of August, so your problems from this should soon be past. However, to remove the stains now present on your clothes, you might try one of the color-remover products sold where dyes are sold. Dissolve two teaspoons of this product in a pint of warm water and sponge or dip the stained garment in it. Or, sponge the stain with water, sprinkle the powdered color remover on it and rub between the fingers. Rinse quickly and thoroughly. This may be repeated if the stain is not completely removed the first time.

Would you give us some information on hanging tiles on walls for pictures? The tiles are pastels and will have decals on them. Tiles are 3 inches square. Should we use cement and ribbon on the backs of squares? R. H.

Yes, you could use cement as you suggest, but instead of the ribbon I'd suggest using a heavy cotton tape. Another way to hang them is to use cloth suspension hooks, made by a decorative paper company and sold at art and variety stores. You may have to use extra glue on them—a strong glue such as airplane cement—for the heavy tiles. Adhesive tape, reinforced with the same cement, might also be used.

What is the significance of the turned down corner of a calling card? When should it be done and which corner? F. P.

A turned down or bent calling card means that the card was left at the door by the visitor and not mailed. However, according to Emily Post, the custom "has very little sense today when cards are left seldom and mailed, without a message, scarcely ever."

Wide Variety of Decor Planned For 'Homes of '49' Exhibit

By Lucia Brown

WHETHER it's a bower of fluffy white organdy or a strictly tailored lair done in mahogany and homespun, a bedroom should sing a lullaby.

Restfulness is a most necessary quality for the sleeping quarters in your house. They should soothe your jangled nerves, quiet your weary mind, and lull you to slumber—quite a large order, unless you happily differ from 99 per cent of the current human race.

Decorators equipping the nine model houses for the "Homes of '49" exhibit this fall agree on the importance of this restful atmosphere. They sometimes come to a parting of the ways, however, on the best way to achieve it. That's one reason why you'll have a chance to see many kinds of bedroom decor as you tour the houses in September. Another is that the decorators believe in suiting the bedroom to the individual—the one that's likely to be living in it.

For sheer varicty, consider the three bedrooms in the model house in Greenwich Forest, Md., to be decorated by Corrado's Inc. One will be furnished entirely in French Provincial, according to Jefferson Davis, decorator with this firm. A white organza spread, sheer white glass curtains, and draperies of lavender-and-green taffeta will be used.

The second large bedroom will be entirely different. Furniture will be of the blonde modern type, the walls a deep green. The third room will be combination study and guestroom. Ornstein is the builder.

At the model house built by M. T. Broyhill & Sons in Arlington, the bedroms will all be modern but very different in appearance. The Miller Furniture Co. of Arlington is equipping this house, with Mrs. Ruth Hodges as decorator.

"We plan to use a modern suite in silver walnut in one bedroom," says Mrs. Hodges, "and a rose and blue color scheme."

The other large bedroom will have furniture in dark, modern mahogany, with wallpaper and drapes in gray, green, and yellow. The third bedroom will combine den and guestroom.

Moving to another part of the Washington area, you'll find that the house furnished by Milton H. Rossler, Inc., has both its bedrooms strictly in the modern manner, too.

"We call it 'New World Modern,'" says Arthur Rossler, decorator for the this firm. "It's informal and comfortable, featuring moderately priced furniture and high colors."

The large bedroom in this house, built by Colonial Construction Corp., has furniture designed by Maximillian of Hollywood. It's made of a gray-finished mahogany along unusual slanting lines. Walls are coral, draperies of hunter's green.

Mirror Finish Repeats Itself

It's all done with mirrors, you know. What is? Why, repeating your decorating colors over and over in the surfaces of your furniture. Furniture with antique-finish mirrors on all flat surfaces are being shown for bedroom and living room. Coffee tables, bedside tables, headboards for beds, all adapt themselves beautifully to the application of smoky mirror surfaces.

A collection of this furniture made by the I. Schwartz Glass & Mirror Co. will be shown on the "Meet Mrs. Markel" television program Tuesday night at 9:30 over WTTG. The furniture, on loan from Mayer & Co., includes both bedroom and living room pieces.

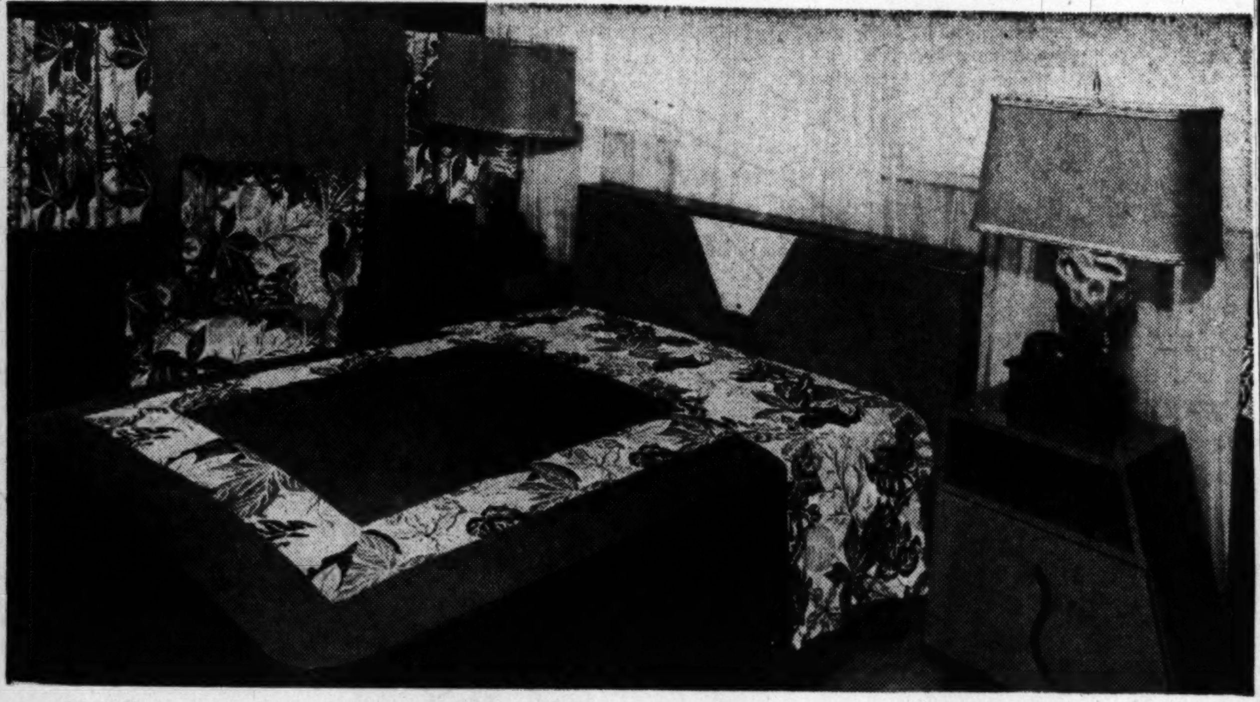
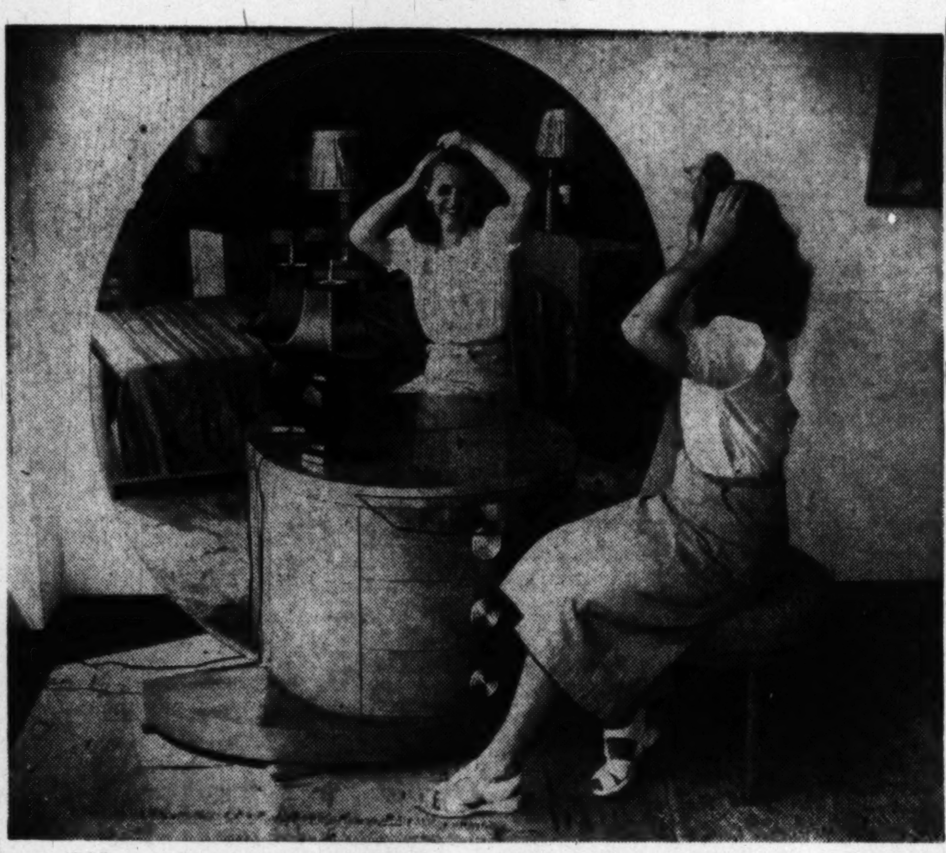
Modern Decorators Join War on Jangled Nerves

Your Bedroom Should Lull You to Sleep



By Robert Burchette—The Washington Post

MODERN furniture designed by Maximillian of Hollywood is used in one bedroom of the Silver Spring model house decorated by Milton H. Rossler, Inc., for the "Homes of '49" exhibit this fall. It's mahogany with a gray finish. Walls are coral and the draperies Hunter's green and jungle print. Note this reading lamp recessed in the headboard of the bed



A BIG, round mirror and a semicircular front are unusual features of this silver walnut dressing table to be used by Miller Furniture Co. of Arlington in one of the "Homes of '49." Mrs. Fred S. Knowles, winner of a recent contest sponsored by the Miller firm, pauses for a glance in the mirror

'Homes of '49' Show 9 Furnished Houses

Nine new houses will be completely decorated by nine Washington furniture stores for the "Homes of '49" exhibit to be sponsored by The Washington Post beginning September 11. The houses, located in various sections of the city, will be open to the public through October 2.

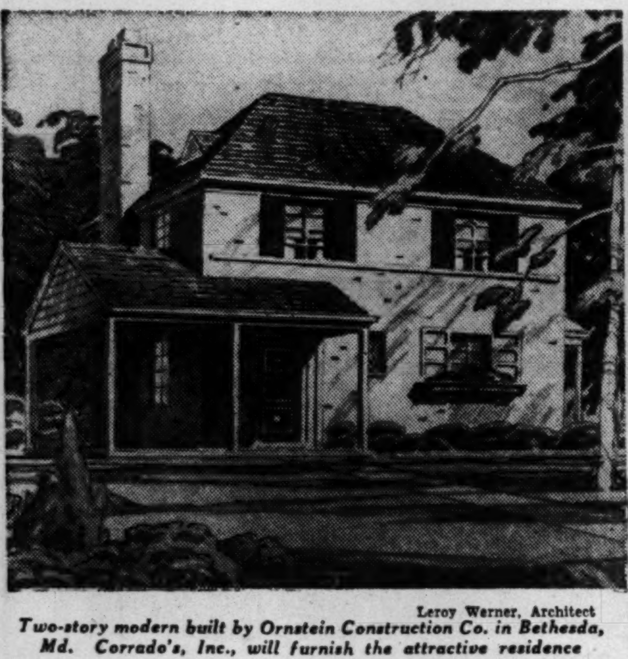
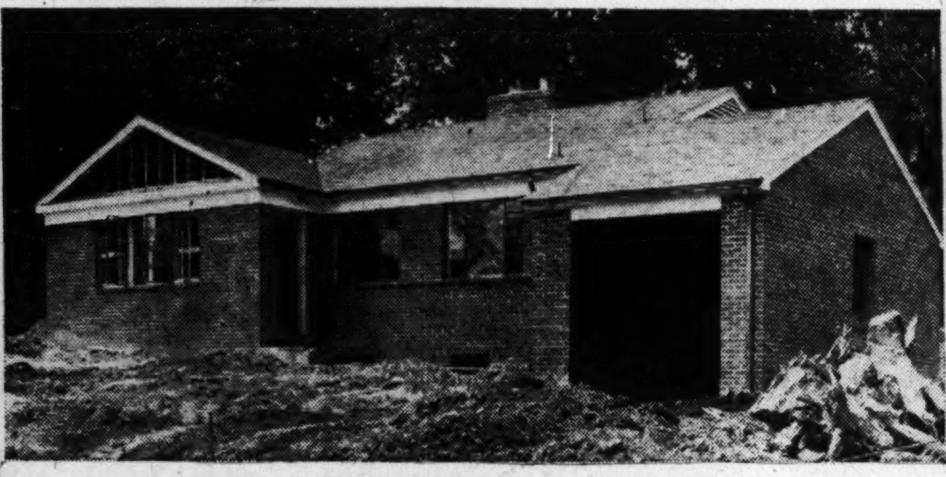
Kitchen Drudgery Out in 'Homes of '49'

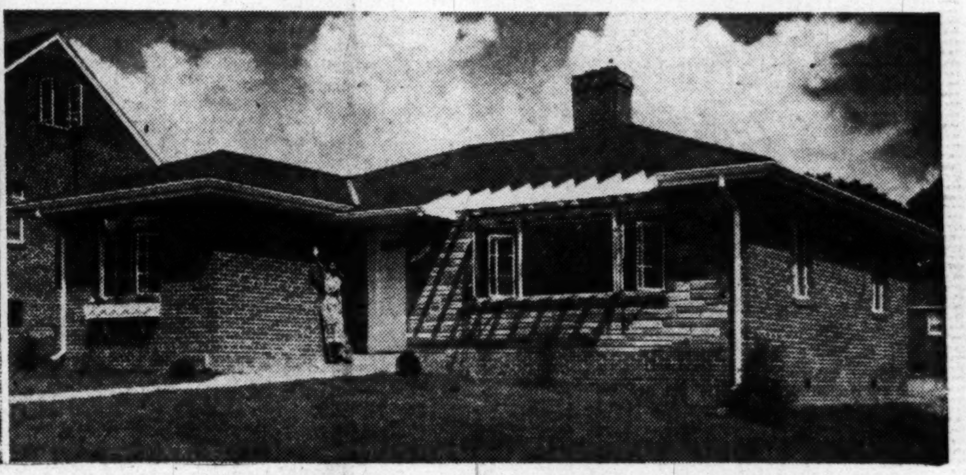


Leroy Werner, Architect

Two-story modern built by Ornstein Construction Co. in Bethesda, Md. Corrado's, Inc., will furnish the attractive residence



L. E. Breuninger is building this rambler "Home of '49" off East-West Hy., Md. It will be completely furnished by the P. J. Nee Co.



Eye-appealing 2-bedroom bungalow built by Glassman Bros. in Carroll Knolls, Md., boasts a new type of warm-air heating. It also has a "floating foundation" designed to eliminate cold floors

Modern Home Takes Varied Furnishings

SITUATED in the wooded section of Greenwich Forest, in Bethesda, Md., is a 27-home program of modern 2-story residences in which a builder and architect have pooled their talents to produce housing to live for decades without losing charm, style or construction value.

The homes are built by Ornstein Construction Co. The model house at 5700 Huntington Parkway is one of the nine furnished dwellings in The Washington Post sponsored "Homes of '49."

The home will be furnished by Corrado's, Inc., and will be ready for public inspection on noon, September 11. The 2-story home is "modern" in architecture, but rooms will be furnished in different styles to prove the home will look attractive with either modern, early American, 18th century reproductions, etc.

The building firm is headed by Ervin W. Ornstein, young nephew of Morris Cafritz, prominent builder-realtor. Ornstein learned his construction "know-how" working for his uncle before the war. Since then he has built a housing project on his own in the Southeast, plus 27 homes in Greenwich Forest.

Leroy Werner, head architect for Cafritz Construction Co., also designed the Ornstein residences.

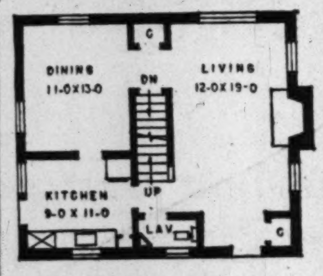
The all-brick homes have an outside front porch area, outside entrance to the basement, powder room on first floor, full tile bath on 2d floor, with three bedrooms upstairs.

Downstairs is a large living room with fireplace and mantel, dining room and equipped kitchen. Architect Werner placed the kitchen at the front of the house so mothers, who spend so much time in the kitchen, could survey the street area and keep an eye on the kids.

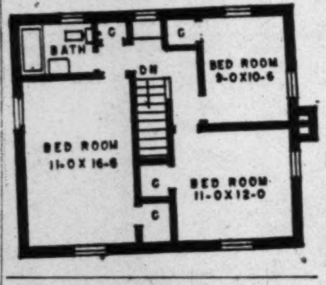
There is a walk-up attic on the third floor, which is insulated and floored for storage purposes.

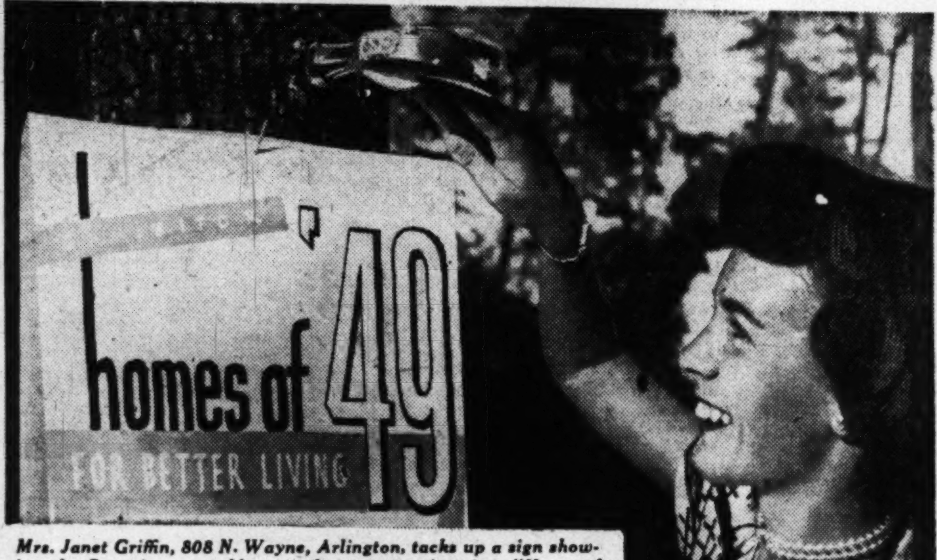
The large lots are adequate for outdoor barbeque pits in the back lawns, in keeping with the rustic setting. Picture windows in both the living room and dining room overlook the rear lawns.

Venetian blinds and copper screens are included in the sales price of $17,950, Ornstein declared.



First floor plan of Ornstein residence doesn't show large front porch





Mrs. Janet Griffin, 808 N. Wayne, Arlington, tacks up a sign showing the Breuninger rambler, under construction, is a "Home of '49." She is a Phyllis Bell model

Builders participating in the "Homes of '49" exhibition are rushing their houses for readiness on opening day, September 11. Construction scene at the L. E. Breuninger project, right, is a good example

Push-Button Equipment Popular

HOUSEWIVES awaiting emancipation from kitchen and household drudgery will enjoy visiting the elaborate kitchen equipment in the 18 "Homes of '49," vast housing extravaganza which opens for four weeks, beginning September 11.

Up-to-date builders are equipping their kitchens with every device which eliminates time-consuming toil. Nine of the homes will be completely furnished and decorated.

Typical in its galaxy of labor saving devices is the home of the L. E. Breuninger home, one of a group of picturesque ramblers in Edgevale Terrace, off East-West Highway, near the Columbia Country Club in Chevy Chase, Md.

It has a garbage disposal, a laundromat, clothes dryer, electric dishwasher and kitchen exhaust fan, all aids to pleasant home life. The floor plan includes a large living room with an unusual fireplace of Roman brick, dining room, three bedrooms, one of which can be used as a den or study, built-in garage and a basement. The estimated sales price is $23,500.

The P. J. Nee Co. will move its experts to the home after September 1 and completely furnish it with "Dream House" furniture. All furnishings are from 1949 stocks and similar pieces are available for purchase if desired.

For less expensive housing tastes, there are several homes in the exhibition from $7750 and up. One is an attractive bungalow sponsored by Glassman Bros., in the Carroll Knolls section of Silver Spring, Md. This particular model is built on a "floating foundation" of steel joists designed to eliminate cold floors. A utility room opening off the kitchen replaces the basement. The room has laundry tubs and space for laundry equipment, if desired. The home sells for $14,500.

A new feature of the Glassman home is a heating system which dispenses warm air from circular diffusers in the ceiling of each room, with return ducts at floor level withdrawing the air from the room and reheating it.

Art Eases Housework

Provo, Utah, (AP).—Art takes the drudgery out of housework, says Provo's artist housewife.

After she was 40 and her children had grown up, Mrs. LaVieve H. Earl began working with water colors. The painting brought new interests into her life. She learned to do oil painting and redecorated her chinaware, lamp shades and other furnishings.

A former school teacher, she has other artistic outlets—woodburning, sewing, floral arrangements, ceramics. And Mrs. Earl doesn't let a handicap stop her. All the fingers on her right hand are missing.

Home Show Lists Tours As Prizes

Plans for one of the biggest prize contests ever held were unveiled last week by sponsors of the Home Show Exposition, to be held in the Armory on October 8 to 16.

Prizes would make a travel agent's mouth water—and, best of all, it costs neither brain work nor money to enter.

Virtually anyone may drop one entry blank into a receptacle on the Armory steps. You don't even have to attend the Home Show. There are no jingles to write, or riddles to solve—just fill out the entry blank with your name, address, etc. for identification purposes, and await the drawings, sponsors say.

Sponsors, the Home Builders Association, listed the following prizes: First prize is $1500 of furniture from the P. J. Nee Co; other prizes include 18 all-expense paid tours to New York City; two six-day chuises to Bermuda; two three-day tours to Havana, and two five-day air tours to Miami Beach, Fla.

Contest rules provide that only residents 18 years or over can enter; blanks, one to a person only, must be deposited in person in the special receptacle on the front steps of the Armory; one prize only per person.

Show sponsors expect over 100,000 persons to attend the third annual exposition of home equipment, materials and exhibits.

4 New Homes Planned

Madison Manor, Inc., will erect four two-story brick homes at 1000, 1004, 1008 and 1012 N. Powhattan st., a building permit has disclosed.

Survey Reveals:

Home-Seeker Wants Better House Than Pocketbook Allows

By T. E. Applegate

NEW YORK, Aug. 20 (AP).—Like the boy whose eyes were bigger than his stomach—home-seekers today want more house than they're willing to pay for at present prices.

This has been true ever since construction costs joined the postwar price skyrocket. It has been confirmed by results of a recent survey of buyers' preferences.

Knowledge of this untapped demand goads the building industry in its search for cheaper ways to build homes.

Pre-cutting of materials, designs using modular units, standardized codes—these are among the methods proposed by the industry and its research groups to produce the house the home buyer wants for the price he will pay.

What does he want? and for how much?

'Composite Home' Here Over $15,000

A check of Washington area real estate ads of new homes reveals that a three-bedroom ranch type rambler, with a basement, fireplace, picture window and gas heat would cost from $15,000, including land, placing it in the same high cost bracket as Chicago and New York.—Editor's note.

20,000 Ideas

SOME of the sharpest answers are provided by the readers of Collier's magazine. More than 20,000 of them responded when Collier's asked questions about the size, style, price and features they would want in their dream home. A composite of the majority preferences expressed shows a house something like this:

Ranch-type (65 per cent want one); one story (80 per cent); three bedrooms (56 per cent); basement (73 per cent); picture window (79 per cent); fireplace (79 per cent); gas (47 per cent) or oil-fired (40 per cent) heating system, with warm air (46 per cent) distribution.

The largest group of those responding (56 per cent) said they would pay $8000 to $10,000 including land. Only 20 per cent expressed willingness to pay $10,000 to $15,000; another 24 per cent put themselves in the $6000 to $8000 class.

Estimated cost of the reader's composite house was put up to Myron L. Matthews, vice president of the Dow Service, publishers of construction information.

He noted that Collier's readers did not specify sizes for the six rooms in their ranch house. In order to arrive at a definite figure, a living area of 840 square feet was assigned arbitrarily. On this basis, Mathews found:

The sales price of the house would run above $15,000, in such high-cost areas as metropolitan New York-New Jersey, or Chicago.

Lower Prices in Dixie

DOW service figures indicate the same house could be built for at least 20 per cent less in lower-cost regions like Atlanta, Ga.; Portland, Oreg.; Columbia, S. C.; Augusta, Me., and Birmingham, Ala.

The top figure could be reduced by more than 10 per cent in San Francisco and Los Angeles, Omaha, Nebr.; Phoenix, Ariz.; Topeka, Kans. and Wausau, Wisc.

Matthews' estimates are based on a probable minimum building cost of 75 cents a cubic foot in the high-cost areas.

He said it appears evident that "the average person has no idea at all what it would cost to supply him with the living accommodations that he prefers."

"You can't buy Cadillac automobiles at bicycle prices," Matthews pointed out. "Neither can you buy $15,000 or $20,000 houses for $9000 or $10,000."

Most of the programs of the building industry for lowering costs are of necessity long-range affairs.

Standardizing building codes to permit use of new raw materials and preassembled parts must be undertaken at the local level, community by community. Many individuals—owners, builders and architects—are slow to adopt the modular principles promoted in the industry-engineered house of the Producers' Council and National Retail Lumber Dealers Association.

Each of these programs holds promise of appreciable savings to the home builder. And each may help eventually to bring the desired home closer to the buyer's idea of what he wants to pay.

Home Building Costs Level After Decline

New York, Aug. 20.—House-building costs to contractors from coast to coast are down 5 per cent from a year ago, according to a Business Week survey.

The magazine notes that contractors hold out little hope for homebuilders who are waiting for a further drop in costs and prices, maintaining that they have reached bottom—for the time being.

The survey shows that buyers are getting choosier, but are still in the market for homes. Today's big demand for houses is in the under-$10,000 bracket. Builders who can offer something good for about $8000 find plenty of takers.

Brisk buying in most cities has led most builders and officials to believe that this year's housing starts will at least equal last year's.

Pennsylvania Pushes Half-Billion Program

Harrisburg, Pa., Aug. 20 (AP). Pennsylvania is in the midst of a half-billion-dollar public works program that is remaking the face of the Keystone State.

The hum and buzz of building is echoing in every section of the State as new hospitals go up at a score of locations and millions are poured into new roads.

On top of that, the Commonwealth is helping home builders, school boards and local governments build houses, schools and airports costing millions more.

The construction program was laid down by Gov. James H. Duff long before there was any job retrenchment in sight, but since the employment letdown has come, the work has turned out to be a substantial economic cushion.

The millions going into new highways, hospitals, schools and other public works are themselves providing thousands of jobs and many times that number are kept busy providing the steel, cement and other materials poured into the building.

Duff has emphasized that the program is being financed without any increase in taxes, except a one-cent-a-gallon jump in the gasoline levy to raise 40 million dollars more for highway building.

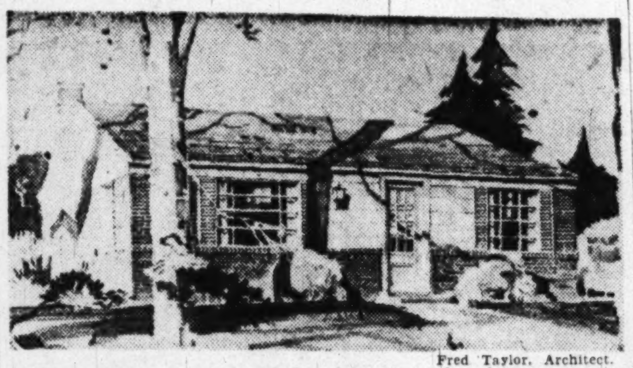
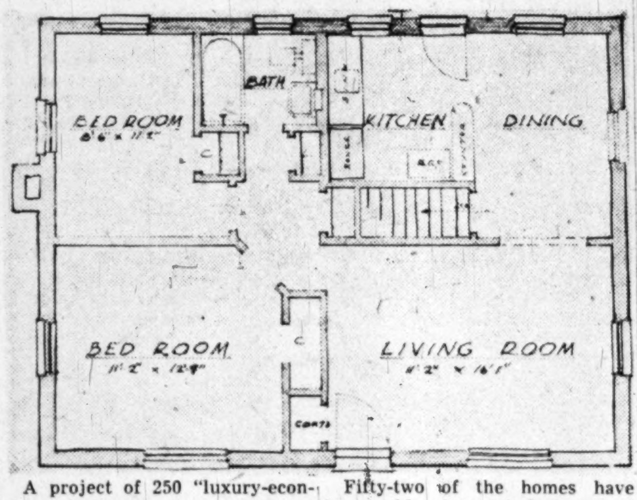
250 'Luxury-Economy' Homes Started in Kensington Area



Fred Taylor, Architect.

Kitchen equipment includes dishwasher, disposal, refrigerator, stove



A project of 250 "luxury-economy" homes has been started by two veteran building firms now operating in the Kensington, Md. area. Two-bedroom brick bungalows, with all-electric kitchen including dishwasher and disposal, will sell at $9990 with no basement, $10,990 with basement.

Builders are Brisker & Korth, Inc., and A. Campitelli & Co., Inc. The project is Kensington Estates, off County rd. The homes have plastered walls, copper plumbing and other features of more expensive housing.

Fifty-two of the homes have been sold prior to today's formal opening. The builders are the developers of Indian Spring Manor, Forest Estates and Fairway, all Maryland housing projects.

The large amount of kitchen equipment included in the home is unusual for this area. The buyer gets the kitchen under a 20-year "package mortgage" which covers all the equipment. The cost is absorbed in the average total payment of $69 per month.

Building Nears New Peak

Construction activity, as measured by the total value of new public and private work put in place, may result in a new dollar volume record of $19,000,000,000 in 1949, according to joint estimates of the Departments of Labor and Commerce.

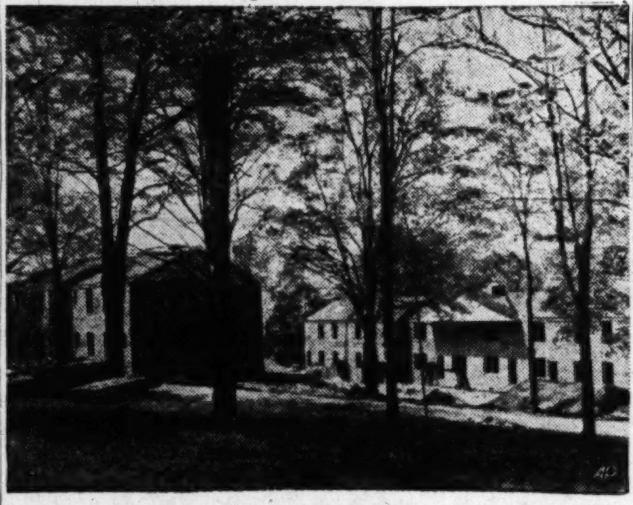
Apartments in Country Attract City Dwellers



Beacon Hill Manor, 38 minutes by train from New York

By Adelaide Kerr

Associated Press Newsfeatures Writer

DOBBS FERRY, N. Y., Aug. 20.—Here's something unique in real estate development which solves a lot of people's problems.

It provides country living with apartment conveniences for medium income families who long to see fresh-air-roses bloom in their children's cheeks. And it does it by using one of the big old estates whose like can be found near almost any city and whose upkeep cost made them white elephants. It is Beacon Hill Manor, a development of 12 apartment houses, built on a 40-acre estate, 38 minutes commuting time from New York.

Estates have been used before to make country homesteads for city folks. But most previous developments cut the land into small plots and built houses. Beacon Hill Manor's unique quality lies in its use of apartments, which relieve their tenants of home-owner's chores, and in its use of the old residence for their relaxation and fun.

Creators of the project are Mme. Elmire During, French-born American citizen, and her son, Maurice During.

The Durings' new development has apartments for 100 families. It includes 11 buildings of colonial design with modern apartments varying from three-room simplexes to five-room duplexes (two stories), and a remodeled residential house which has some one-room apartments. Rents range from $105 to $175 a month. Features include fireplaces, use of a basement laundry, tree-shaded lawns, a big outdoor swimming pool and bath houses, a picturesque duck pond, formal gardens and acres of woodland.

The big English Tudor house, still holding many of the Louis XIV antiques and tapestries with which it was furnished, is being converted to a club with restaurant, lounge and recreation rooms. Residents may join it for $75 yearly dues.

"The whole project cost about one million dollars and with the apartments now built will pay a good 5 per cent," says Mme. During. "But at present we are only using 5 acres. Actually we have enough land to house 800 families and expect to build more apartment houses. We also plan to build stores."

Mme. During, daughter of a well-to-do French builder, came to this country as a young widow after World War I and followed her father's footsteps into real estate. She is past 70 now, but she works with the vision of a dreamer and the drive of a dynamo to handle planning and financing. Her son, a Princeton alumnus, is a practical builder. Together they have created some of New York's most interesting real estate developments.

Frederick Opens Realty Office

N. G. Frederick, sales manager for J. Garrett Beitzell for the past 12 years, has opened his own realty office at 2151 K st. nw., under the name of Frederick Real Estate.

FREDERICK

Associated with him is his son, George, formerly associated in a sales capacity with the Beitzell firm. The new brokerage office is located in a three-story building which Frederick purchased and remodeled for his use.

The firm will handle all phases of real estate, including sales, insurance, loans and property management.

Garden Show Schedule Set

The schedule for the fourteenth annual rose show of the Garden Club of Virginia lists over 100 classes of specimens, collections and arrangements. The show will be held in the Rotunda of the University of Virginia, at Charlottesville, on October 8 and 9.

Most of the classes are open to the general public as exhibitors, whether members of garden clubs or not. Sponsors estimate that nearly 1000 entries will be shown.

Complete schedules, with rules and regulations for entrants, may be obtained from Mrs. W. J. Rankin, Box 1776, University Station, Charlottesville, Va.

Census to List 40 Million U. S. Housing Units

By Alexander R. George

A NATION-WIDE census of housing will be taken along with the count of population and the agricultural census next April.

A survey of dwelling conditions was made by the Census Bureau in the spring of 1947. Why is another one needed?

The 1947 survey was only a sample census, taken in 32 big cities. The 1950 census will cover all of the country's dwelling units —some 40 million of them, ranging from converted boxcars on abandoned railroad sidings to swank houses and apartments.

Congress authorized the survey in the new housing law to provide detailed information on a locality basis. Houses on farms and in villages will be included as well as city dwelling units.

The most recent detailed locality information now available was obtained in the 1940 census of housing. Tremendous geographic shifts in population during the war years have resulted in outdating much of the 1940 information.

An increase in population of about 18 million and wear and tear on dwellings over 10 years also have changed the housing picture. Another factor is the improvement in the general economic situation since 1940.

The House Committee on Banking and Currency, which handled the 1949 Housing Act, says the census will be of value to these groups:

1. Federal, State and city authorities and others directly concerned with housing problems?

2. Business and industry, which depend upon housing and home building for part or all of the outlet for their goods and services.

3. Local merchants, who will get a better picture of general sales possibilities in various types of residential areas.

The housing census will be taken by the enumerators who count the population. They will ask questions about the size and condition of dwellings, about plumbing and other facilities, number of occupants, rental values and mortgages.

96,000 New Apartments, Homes Started

July was nearly another 100,000 building month, with 96,000 new homes and apartments started over the Nation, according to Bureau of Labor Statistics estimates. This shot the total for the first seven months to 549,100 units, within 4 per cent of last year's record.

Both June and July "starts" exceeded those of the same two months of last year. In 1948 the figures were 97,800 and 95,000 respectively. The 1949 totals are 100,000 and 96,000.

July's performance was the third successive month this year in which housing starts were at or near the 100,000 mark. The high level of housing activity, BLS said, has been supported by an increasingly large volume of apartment house construction.

Permits for building over the Nation show that rental housing more than doubled between the first and second quarters. When building permit reports for the first half of 1948 and 1949 are compared, urban rental housing this year almost equals the volume for 1948, but the number of single family houses authorized is less by 16 per cent.

Building Permit Let

A building permit to erect a one-story brick warehouse at 3804 So. Four Mile Run dr., Arlington, has been issued to I. Newton Miller, owner and builder.

This Week In D. C. Real Estate

FOLLOWING presidential approval of the military housing act passed recently by Congress, FHA Commissioner Franklin D. Richards has announced that FHA rules and regulations under the new law are being prepared and will be in effect very shortly.

The act is designed to assist in relieving housing shortages that affect both civilian and military employes of the national military establishment throughout the country. It amends the National Housing Act by adding a new Title VIII which makes special provision for FHA insurance of mortgages on rental housing to be built by private capital for these employees and their families.

The insurance under Title VIII parallels that currently available under Section 608. The new titlte provides for insurance of a maximum mortgage of $5,000,000, representing not more than 90 per cent of replacement costs and not more than $8100 per family unit except that where the need will be better served by single-family dwelling units the mortgage principle may be as much as $9000 per family unit. The interest rate may not exceed 4 per cent.

The Realtors' Bowling League, in its first meeting of the 1949-50 season, re-elected as president, Thomas H. Schaffert of H. G. Smithy Co. James Stanton of District Title Co. was re-elected vice-president; Joseph Francella, of District Title Co., re-elected official scorer-secretary; and J. D. Skinner, of Columbia Federal Savings and Loan was elected treasurer.

There are a few franchises open in the league. Any office interested in placing a team should contact Joe Francella at NA 8885 or Tommy Schaffert at ST 3300. The next meeting is set for Tuesday, 5 p. m., at the Washington Real Estate Board, 1417 K st. nw.

Although nearly half of the 37 million nonfarm homes in the United States are less than 30 years old, about two million, or 5.5 per cent of the units, were built 70 or more years ago, the Producers' Council reports. About 20 per cent, or seven million, have been standing 50 or more years. The council pointed out that there is a large amount of housing which should be ripe for replacement because it cannot compete in convenience, comfort, or value with the vastly superior new housing being constructed today.

There are 102 savings associations in the United States which have been operating 75 years or more. Largest, reports the United States Savings and Loan League, is the 27-million-dollar American Building Association of Washington, D. C. Other local oldtimers listed by the association are Metopolis Building Association (1866) and Oriental Building Association (1861).

The Washington Real Estate Brokers Associaition, Negro realty group, will send two members to the national group's annual convention in Detroit, August 22-24. They are Jim Greene, president, and Arnett G. Lindsay, Greene is also a director of the national group.

The Nation's new six-year program for providing 810,000 units of public low-rent housing for low-income families is ready to go into action, the Public Housing Administration has announced. Application forms and instructions for participation in the program are being mailed to 500 local housing authorities in 42 States. These groups, as well as others which may be organized, will build, own and operate the housing projects with Federal financial subsidies.

Sidney Z. Mensh Opens Realty Offic

Sidney Z. Mensh, manager for Goldsten Bros. for the past three years, has opened his own real estate brokerage office at 1527 Eye st. nw.

Operating under the name of Sidney Z Mensh & Co., the new firm will handle sales, appraisals, insurance, mortgage loans and property management.

Mensh is a native Washingtonian and attended Central High School and George Washington University. He recently completed an appraisal course given by the American Institute of Real Estate Appraisers at the University of Alabama.

Home Hints

GOADED by this summer's mercury-boiling heat and humidity, nearly everybody is talking about the weather. Home owners who don't get around-the-clock use from their porches are neglecting one means of doing something about it. A sleeping porch can help make hot nights shorter and more pleasant.

Out where the breezes blow, the porch can be turned into an airy but weatherproof outdoor bedroom with little effort and moderate cost. Here are some suggestions for converting it for day and night duty:

1. The roofless porch can be protected from rain by an inexpensive canvas awning.
2. Waterproof tile floors can take frequent wettings, be mopped up in a jiffy and withstand extreme temperature changes.
3. Metal or wicker furniture will resist constant weather exposure.
4. Fine screening will exclude dust and insects, but not the breeze.
5. A studio couch and one or two comfortable chairs can make the porch a pleasant outdoor sitting room for daytime or early evening.
6. Folding beds or cots are ideal for ground floor porches that are essentially outdoor living rooms.
7. Bed covers of waterproof materials, now available in many colors and designs, will protect beds or studio couch from dampness.
8. Ferns and other potted plants will provide daytime shade and a cool look.
9. Midday sun can be shut out by plastic draw curtains that need no laundering. They can be wiped clean.
11. Don't treat the breezeway bedroom too casually in decorating it. Select paint, furniture and floor colors to match or complement colors in adjoining rooms.

THE HAZARDS of china faucet and valve handles are stressed by the Plumbing and Heating Industries Bureau. China handles are likely to break and cut the hand or arm of the user. The replacement of all china handles with metal is advocated.

OLD PANTRIES can be converted into attractive and colorful half-baths by the installation of lavatory and water closet.

SUMMER is the ideal time to replace old-style bulky radiators with new models which are 40 per cent smaller yet give off just as much heat.

THERE ARE MORE than 300 feet of concealed piping in the walls and under the floors of the average house. It pays to have this installed under the supervision of a plumbing contractor whose knowledge and skill will assure durability and trouble-free operation of the installation.

Hechinger Wins Honors in Poll

The Hechinger Co., local lumber and building materials firm, has been selected as the "institution of the month" by a national poll conducted by Building Supply News, official trade magazine.

The honor was won by Hechinger because of outstanding advertising and sales promotion efforts, plus aggressive merchandising at point of sale, the magazine stated.

New Materials

'Noise Proof' Home Subdues Even Junior

SINCE science has discovered that nerve-racking noise, originating both within and without the home, causes physical illness by increasing blood pressure, impairing digestion and bringing nervous disorders through lack of sleep, architects and builders are devoting increased attention to noise-abatement in modern dwellings, reports the Construction Research Bureau, New York clearing house for building information.

The building industry is attacking the problem by using new sound-deadening materials and by sound-stopping construction. In many cases, results are phenomenal, it was said. Some insulation, for example, will absorb 87 per cent of the sound waves reaching it.

Sound travels in waves, and architectural noise-proofing consists of stopping these waves. In the case of a truck passing in the street, its sound waves hit the outside walls of the house. This vibration is transmitted to the air space within the walls, thence to the inside wall and jarringly strikes the human ear.

Each time that sound waves are passed on to another surface, some of them are absorbed or "damped out." Therefore, the greater the thickness of the walls and the more layers of material and air spaces through which sound must travel, the greater the degree by which noise is reduced, it was explained by Construction Research Bureau engineers.

Sound-Deadening Methods

THICK MASONRY walls will stop sound effectively, the bureau said, but are impractical from a cost standpoint. Resonant, hollow walls faced with thin material is the most widely used construction and noise penetration is excessive. Architects now offset this by insulating hollow walls with materials that save fuel in winter and make the home cooler in winter.

The new type of windows consisting of two panes of glass with a dead air space between, primarily to stop heat, are also used to reduce outside sound penetration.

Exterior sound is only part of the noise problem. Inside the home the clatter can become terrific and is perhaps more nerve-jangling than street noise. Sounds created within the home have a vicious tendency to bounce off the walls and ceilings and become amplified unless precautions are taken to abate the condition.

Acoustic ceiling material will trap 75 per cent of interior produced noises reaching the ceilings, which amplify sound more than any other part of the rooms. This material is especially useful in the kitchen, where much of the interior noise originates.

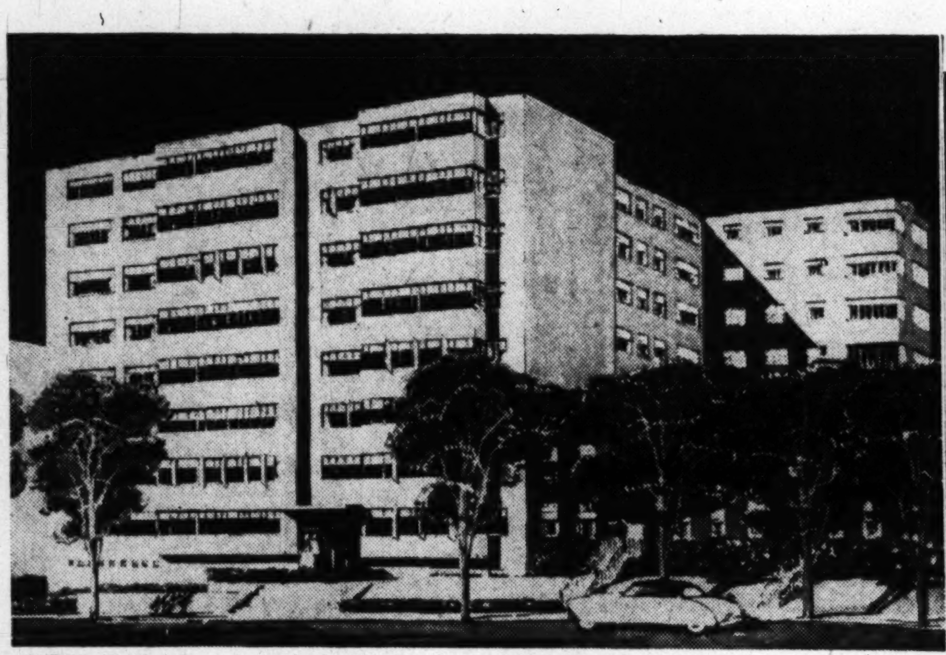
Eliminate Source

OTHER structural means of reducing noise include placing builders' felt between sub-floor and finish flooring, and building paper between wall sheathing and exterior siding. Firm, tight construction is especially important. This means tightly-nailed floor boards, well-fitting windows that do not rattle, solid doors that are not resonant. Water supply pipes should be large enough so that they will not pound when faucets are shut off quickly.

No acoustical material, insulation or other structural components can prevent the origination of noise; they can only reduce it. The Construction Research Bureau urges householders to cover work surfaces with rubber or composition material. Liberal use of draperies and noise-absorbent floor coverings will make the home quieter. Of top importance is a small can of household lubricating oil for squeaking hinges and noisy motors of fans, refrigerator and other mechanical equipment.

Squeaking boards of stairs and floors can be corrected by nailing them tight. All that is needed to stop the maddening drip of a water faucet is a new washer. Squeaking windows can be quieted by lubricating the channels in which they slide. Door closers or numerous kinds of catches will prevent nerve-racking door slamming.

Noisy radiators, oil burner or coal stoker, toilets and hammering water pipes require the attention of heating contractors and plumbers. These conditions should have immediate attention as soon as they appear, not only to stop the noise, but to prevent serious damage to the equipment.



UNDER WAY: Ground was broken last week for the Potomac Park Apartments, new rental addition to the downtown landscape at 21st and E sts. nw. The eight-story project will have 145 apartments, is scheduled for completion in July, 1950. Builder is Lester Rosenberg; Berla & Abel architects. The site is directly across the street from the new proposed Red Cross building. The completed building will have a basement and sub-basement, with parking facilities

Homes Swapped—Even

St. Petersburg, Fla., (AP).—Mr. and Mrs. Philip Graham, who operate a photo studio here, had just too much space at their residence—eight rooms on two lots with a number of fruit trees. William H. Brown, Florida State theater employe, and Mrs. Brown—on the other hand—thought their new three-bedroom bungalow much too small.

A real estate company heard of their wants, found each had the same equity in their homes, and arranged an even swap.

Building Contracts Drop From Top High

New York, Aug. 20 (AP). — Engineering construction contracts awarded this week totaled $137,173,000, Engineering News-Record reported today.

This was 47 per cent under last week's $257,314,000, which was the year's record high, but still represented a gain of 17 per cent over the $117,146,000 for the like week of last year.

THE MYSTERY HOUSE in WHITEHALL

Washington's newest close-in development of fine homes adjacent to Kenwood

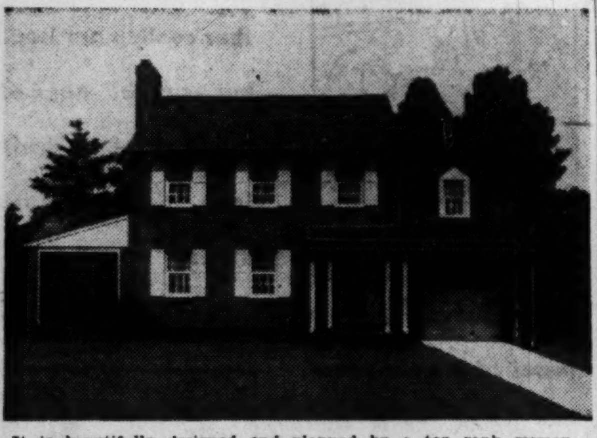
Continues to Mystify



It is beautifully designed and planned by a top rank woman architect. It is built to a standard of workmanship and material seldom used in houses built for sale. The lot is very large, the front yard being 70½x115' and the rear yard 70'x124'. The owners on each side are the kind of people you would like to have as neighbors. The first floor: Entrance hall with powder room opening from it, living room with clear black slate facing and hearth of the fireplace, large dining room with triple window, a beautiful kitchen with GE garbage Disposall, and a garage of really usable size. The second floor: Three twin bed sized bedrooms, two baths each with tub and shower, and seven lighted closets including two linen closets. There is a large storage attic and a basement with real headroom, rear entrance, and toilet. Douglas fir joists and rafters, slate roof with copper snow guards, built-in television conduit and circuit breaker.

All other Frizzell-built homes, including one only half finished, have been purchased by people experienced in home ownership. Bought directly from builder its price of $27,950 should interest those who have been waiting to get more home value for their money.

The house was finished just a year ago and we who know the location and the inherent fineness of its plan and construction cannot understand why it has not been sold long before this. The substantial cash payment required in all WHITEHALL sales has deterred a number who wanted it but it is nonetheless a puzzle why purchasers with the requisite cash have passed up such a value. If you would like to see how a really well-built house looks a year after it was finished come out to

Giant Wants Small House, Big Rooms

PORTLAND, OREG., Aug. 20 (U.P.). Houses aren't built with 9-foot doors for Clifford M. Thompson, 43, the 8-foot, 7-inch lawyer from Wisconsin who wants to settle down in Oregon.

He and his normal-height wife, Mary, moved into an ordinary hotel apartment a week ago and said they had come to stay. When Thompson settles in a strange place he does it on two ordinary beds.

What he's looking for is "a small house with big rooms."

While waiting for his Oregon license to practice law, Thompson has been beseiged by realtors "trying to sell me mansions.

"I'm spending most of my time in the open. Today I'm going to talk to the dairy co-op picnic and tell them how I grew up on milk."

"There's too much ice in Wisconsin," he explained. "Oregon is much safer. Back home in the winter, Mary had to scatter ashes from my front door to the office so I wouldn't slip on the ice—and I've got a long way to fall. He weighs 460.

"I can't get overshoes made my size (22) although I am able to get shoes.

Thompson carries a 46-inch cane. It's slightly less than the width of a ping-pong table.

Thompson got his legal start by collecting bills after his graduation from Marquette University Law School.

"It was very interesting," he mused. "People paid up about 99 per cent of the time I came to the door. I had to stoop a little and talk kindly so I wouldn't scare them too much."

Thompson started to sprout because of a vigorous pituitary gland. He grew 9 inches in a year and continued to move up until his twenty-seventh birthday.

FOR year-round COMFORT AND CONVENIENCE!

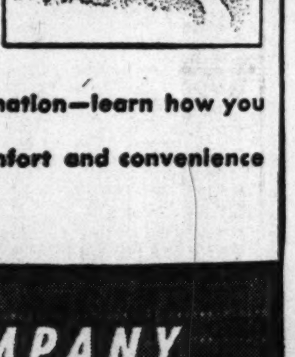
Today, many Washingtonians are enjoying clean controlled climate right in their own homes! These people are owners of the famous Gas-operated Servel "All-Year" Air Conditioners.

You, too, can forget about the outdoor weather and have inside temperature exactly as you personally desire it—and with fingertip control. It's that simple with the new Servel "selectrol."

In one compact unit you get the comfort and convenience of all-year air conditioning for your family's daily enjoyment: cooling and dehumidification, heating and humidification, air cleaning, and air circulation—plus the safety and privacy afforded by closed doors and windows, freedom from street noises and dirt, or damage from sudden storms.

In summer, this all-year air conditioning unit circulates cooled invigorating air, free from dust, insects and pollen. In winter, it supplies clean, properly humidified, draft-free warmth. During spring and fall—when neither cooling nor heating may be needed, it will circulate draft-free, filtered-clean air at prevailing temperatures.

The Servel "All-Year" Air Conditioner can be installed in your present home, or it can be economically included in the new home you are planning to build.



Call for complete information—learn how you can have year-round comfort and convenience in your home.

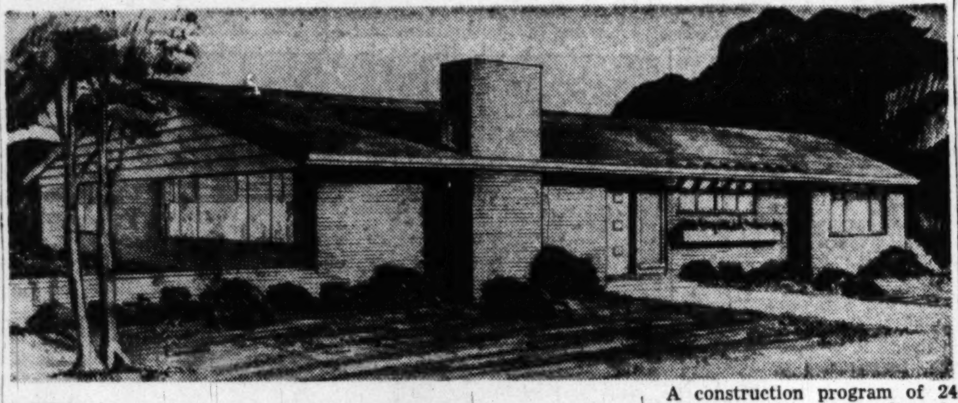
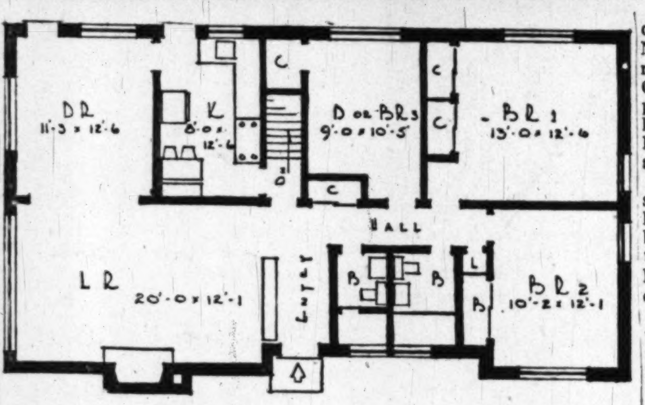
Luxury Ramblers Set for Northwest Section





Leon Brown, Architect

A construction program of 24 de luxe ramblers on sites in Northwest D. C. has been announced by Aldon Construction Co. The location is 16th and Aspen st. nw., where the same firm has completed 45 homes of colonial design. The ramblers will sell for $23,950.

The exterior is of brick construction, with low, smart roof lines. The floor plan includes two bedrooms, third bedroom or den, two baths, 20 by 25 combination living-dining room, picture windows and outside stone patio.

Aldon officials said the project would be one of the first of luxury ramblers ever built in the Northwest section of the District. Three have been sold before completion, it was added.

HHFA Cites Cost-Cutting Building Practics

The Housing and Home Finance Agency, urging builders to erect more low-cost homes throughout the Nation, yesterday reported these three cases of lower price tags:

A Jackson, Miss., builder is selling 2-bedroom homes, with 912 square feet of floor area, for $8750, with $1750 down. Features include plastered walls, hardwood flooring, overhead insulation, attic fan, floor furnace, rubber tile flooring in bath and kitchen, side screened porch, etc.

Precutting and finishing shops were set up at the edge of the 41-house development to reduce on-site work to the minimum. A work schedule was established, and followed, producing better homes at lower cost.

A Detroit firm is selling a 2-bedroom, no basement bungalow for $6695, with 10 per cent down and an FHA mortgage. Features oak floors, double sink with spray in kitchen, bath with shower and tub, steel casement windows, copper screens, vestibule with louver glass, insulated walls and ceiling, plastered walls and ceiling, frame exterior, brass weatherstripping, decorative cabinets and closets with hat, clothes and shoe racks. Seventy of the homes have been sold.

An Illinois builder is producing a 26 by 24 foot, 2-bedroom house selling for $3895, including a 75 by 120 foot lot. Specifications include bath and kitchen sink and cabinet combination with chrome fixtures. Weatherstripped double-hung windows with overhead springs slash balances are installed, except for the picture windows of the fixed casement type.

Blanket wool insulation is used on sidewalls and ceiling. Shiplap, felt and shingles are on the outside walls; inside finish is wallboard. There is no interior trim except the bathroom door, and other jams and stops. Footings are 42-inch poured concrete with 8-inch concrete grade. Two 30 by 12-inch foundation windows are installed for access storage and ventilation.

Especially in Washington

Restaurants and shops that installed air conditioning reported a 20 to 35 per cent increase in business during the record heat of the last summer, according to reports to Minneapolis-Honeywell Regulator Company.

Bathroom Remodeling Starts With Tub

WHEN modernizing an old bathroom, start with the bathtub. Cover the sides and legs of the old-fashioned tub with bright-colored panels of plastic or wood painted any desired color. Elevate the tub by setting the legs on 4-inch wooden blocks. Build two 6-inch-deep drawers in the space beneath the tub. These will provide more storage space, end under-tub dust-catching and make cleaning easy.

Since the bathroom needs sunlight, make the entire outside wall of the bath opaque glass, either in block or sheet form. This affords privacy, admits light. Make the room gayer with buttercup yellow walls, and accent this color with leaf-green marbleized asphalt tile flooring and touches of the same colors in the draperies.

Save space in the bathroom by fitting one of the new types of clothes hampers between the wall studs. These hampers are recessed into the wall like a medicine cabinet, will hold as much as the conventional hamper, yet project only 3 or 4 inches into the room.

Even Novices Succeed With New Lily Sorts

Regal lilies have a romantic history

By Katherine Barrett Pozer

AFTER seeing hundreds of magnificent blooms at the recent lily show, many local gardners are planning to include some of these lovely flowers in their gardens. The difficulty in growing them in this climate has discouraged many. However hybridizers have productd many lilies that will bloom with only a novice's care.

Years of patient experimenting goes into producing fine hybrids It means bringing bulbs from all over the world and trying to cross them to produce hardy and beautiful flowers. Crosses are made with lilies from cold climates and those from warm areas, those which like low, damp spots and those which will survive dry, hot weather.

While many lilies used in hybridizing have come from faraway places, American lilies are used also, saving some varieties from extinction.

Romantic is the story as told by Mrs. Norman Henry of Gladwyn, Pa., of her searches for rare American lilies. She has traveled deep into the swamplands of the South and has traced fabled lilies in the Western grazing lands where specimens were found by recognizing one or more leaves, indicating that a lily bulb lay beneath.

TIGER lilies brought from nearby fields have long graced American gardens. Crosses between these and the upturned cupped lilies, the umbellatums, have produced lovely hybrids with the good qualities of both parents. Umbellatums are very hardy and easy to grow. They last well either in the garden or as cut flowers. They will make a good clump in a year or two. They like a sunny position and should be planted about 5 inches deep

The lilium candidum, or Madonna lily, should be planted in August with the top only an inch or an inch and a half below the surface. It will put up a cluster of green leaves soon after planting.

The auratum, or golden banded lily of Japan, is one of the most beautiful of all garden flowers, but is very temperamental and often will disappear after the first year. Its discovery in 1862 caused a new wave in lily interest both here and abroad, an interest which died when this lovely variety proved so difficult to grow.

It thrives in the Northwest and much work is being done not only to give it more varied form and coloring but to give it the qualities needed for general garden use. It is so lovely, however, that many local gardeners purchase new bulbs each year feeling they are well repaid by one season's bloom.

The speciosum rubrum, a fine pink spotted lily, is a little less difficult to grow and will often persist and make a good clump when soil and general gardening

LET'S TALK ABOUT GARDENS

Fall Garden Possible, But Use Precautions In Vegetable Planting

By James H. Beattie

IT'S NOT too late for a fall garden! Several worthwhile vegetables may be planted after August 15—but drouth and heat make it necessary to use special precaution.

Some locations, usually on hillsides, may remain frost-free in autumn for as much as a month later than valley and flat land with poor "air drainage." The frost factor should have careful consideration in selecting plants for late summer and autumn. Only the more hardy plants should be planted in locations where there is danger of an early frost.

Snap beans, beets, carrots, kale, lettuce, parsley, radishes, spinach and turnips can be grown if planted now. One gardener has inquired about growing fall garden peas. Peas sometimes do very well as a fall crop if seeded about the middle of August, and moderately cool, moist weather prevails.

At best, fall peas are not a certain crop and one should not attempt them without a full realization that failure may result. When they succeed, the quality is very high. Those having freezers usually grow spring peas and freeze them for later use.

Plenty of Variety

THERE are a number of other vegetables that may be planted at once provided one has plants ready for setting in the garden. The more important are: sprouting broccoli, Brussels sprouts, cabbage, celery and collards. Rhubarb and horseradish are not particularly successful in this area, but both succeed in favored locations and may be planted any time during autumn. Late autumn is an excellent time to set asparagus crowns, but the work must be deferred until the plants have completed their growth before they are moved.

Too many persons make the mistake of covering asparagus crowns too deeply. They should be set a few inches below the natural surface of the site, covered only an inch or two at the start and the soil gradually worked around the plants, as growth proceeds, throughout the first growing season.

The fall gardener must overcome the troubles arising from drouth and excessive heat. They make it very difficult to obtain good germination of seeds and to set plants in the garden and have them live. The practice of several simple, inexpensive schemes reduce and even completely overcome these troubles.

Start Them Right!

WHEN setting plants: The soil should be thoroughly pulverized to a depth of several inches. Clods, and air spaces in the soil make it difficult for moisture to move freely from the subsoil to the upper layers. Pick a time when the soil is moist and set the plants either on a cloudy day or during the evening. Fill carefully around the roots with fine soil and pack it firmly in place.

Before completely filling the hole, add a half-pint of starter solution made by mixing a half pound of 5-10-5 garden fertilizer with three to four gallons of water. After the solution has soaked in, complete the filling of the holes, using fine soil, leaving a slight depression around the stem of the plant to catch rain or irrigation water.

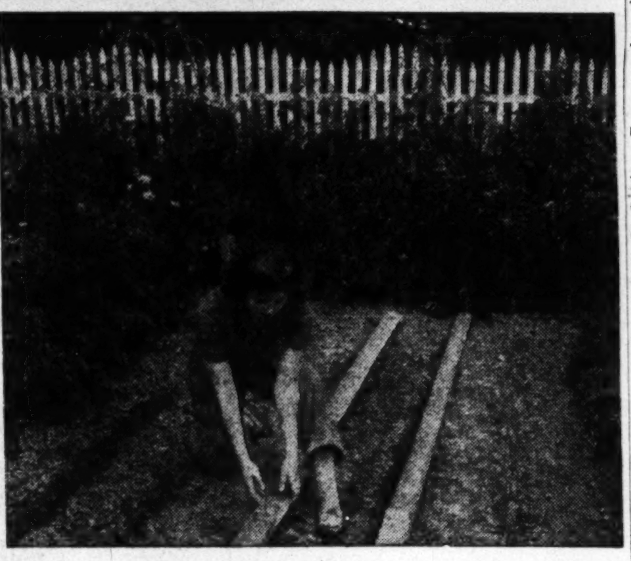
Finally, shade the plants for a day or two, using small branches of trees with an abundance of foliage.

Branches a foot or two long stuck into the soil on the sunny side of the plants provide some shade and also permit ventilation. Covering with paper may cause an undue rise of temperature. Farmers often use rhubarb or burdock leaves to cover newly set plants.

Don't Let Soil Bake

SEED planting precautions: Thoroughly prepared soil is a must. It is practically useless to sow seeds during mid-summer in a lumpy, dry soil. Unless the soil is thoroughly soaked a day or two in advance by rain, it should be artificially watered. In some cases it may be sufficient to thoroughly wet only the actual site of the seed-row. In others, it is more convenient to open the seed-row, sow the seeds, cover and then soak the row by applying water with a fine spray or a sprinkling can. This plan is objectionable if the soil is heavy textured and inclined to bake, but this can be overcome by covering a strip a few inches wide, above the seed with sand, peat or some other material that will not harden.

The rows over fall sown seeds should be kept moist until the seedlings are up and well established, followed wherever possible by a regular irrigation routine.



Shading new seedrows with a 6-inch board prevents soil from baking. Boards must be removed as soon as the seedlings are ready to push through the surface.

Extra feeding of plant food as harvest nears gives a super yield

Soaking the seeds overnight or a little longer before planting usually helps in getting the plants up and in obtaining a good stand. Care must be exercised to avoid soaking too long.

Shading the seed-rows with leafy branches or with a 6-inch board laid flat on the seed-row until the plants begin to come through also help, but in the case of the boards, these must be removed as soon as the seedlings are ready to push through the surface.

Mulching the seed-row and the spaces between the rows with straw, peat or other weed-free material also aids in obtaining germination and a good stand. Mulch placed directly on top of the seed-row must be pulled away from the row as the plants begin to emerge.

More to Tree Watering Than Meets The Eye

There's more to watering a tree than meets the eye—or roots, particularly during August's dry spells. Authorities agree most people don't know the proper technique.

During dry weather, thousands of trees, particularly shallow rooted ones, are bound to suffer, warns L. F. Irvine of the Davey Tree Expert Co. They need sympathetic help, but most of all a good drink. Trees growing in sandy soils are apt to require more than the average dunking.

Ideally suited for tree watering is soil-soaker canvas hose, which generally can be obtained in lengths from 15 to 60 feet. It fastens on to the regular garden hose. Mr. Irvine says the homeowner should lay out the canvas hose in circles over the root area and let the water run from three to four hours. Water will ooze out, but cause no wash.

Thorough watering at intervals of 10 days is advisable during dry, hot weather. The normal-sized tree requires a penetrating wetting at least two feet deep carried to the outer circles of branches.

Shallow watering tends to make roots reach upwards for moisture, putting them in an exposed position and making them susceptible to the next drought. Shallow roots also are an insecure foundation and may leave a tree vulnerable to violent storms.

Crude Rubber Ratio Down

Washington.—The ratio of crude rubber to the total of crude and man-made rubber consumed in the United States in June was at the lowest point since October of 1947, declining to 61.8 per cent.

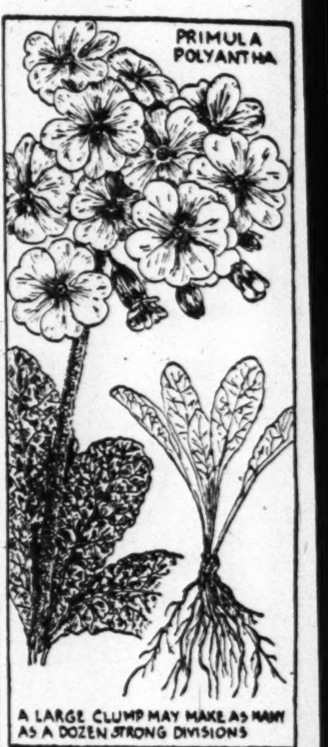
Primroses Can Be Grown Here---If Care Is Taken

By Alfred Putz

NYHT News Service



A LARGE CLUMP MAY MAKE AS MANY AS A DOZEN STRONG DIVISIONS

TRY to remember how often you have heard gardeners say that primroses are hard to grow in our climate. While it is true that many gardeners can relate sad experiences, there are a great many others who can point with pride to anything from a marvelous single plant to a whole bed of them which has thrived for many years.

A few black sheep in the genus, so far as garden culture in our climate is concerned, is no reason to condemn the whole tribe. Of course, you cannot expect even the easy ones to become permanent if you stick them in here and there with no thought of providing conditions they require.

It is wise to start with the easiest ones before venturing into more difficult subjects. You cannot beat the bunch primrose (primula polyantha), which sometimes is listed as polyanthus, and the cowslip (primula veris var, officinalis).

Polyantha is a horticultural development derived from the species veris, elatior and acaulis. The flowers are borne in clusters—botanists call them umbels—held above the foliage by stout stems. The color range is both beautiful and varied with yellow shades predominating. They bloom with us from mid-April until mid-May, and occasionally longer if the season remains cool.

Cowslip Imported

THE cowslip is native to Britain, continental Europe and parts of Asia. It, too, carries its flowers in umbels but the colors are restricted to shades of yellow except for an occasional red or red-and-yellow one. They have a delightful fragrance and bloom at the same time as the polyantha group.

Starting with plants is the easiest way to acquire a display. They may be set out in September or as early in the spring as the ground is ready to receive them. Established plants lend themselves to dividing into several strong crowns and the period following the flower display is the best time for such propagation.

You may have read about putting them in a sunny crevice of the rock garden, but this advice, hardly holds true for our climate. Where spring brings miniature heat waves and summer would not be complete without a month of drought and heat, they do much better in a semishaded position.

The north side of the shrubbery border is ideal because of the filtered sunlight that reaches them until the shrubs are in leaf. And there aso is the early morning and late evening sunlight during the summer. They like a fairly low spot where moisture is more uniform, but cannot survive where the crowns stand flooded at any time of the year.

Add Sand to Soil

GOOD GARDEN soil will do nicely but for best results a mixture of two parts good garden soil, one part peatmoss and one part semicoarse sand is far superior. Let this take the place of the present soil to a depth of 6 to 8 inches. If drainage is poor at the bottom level take out another four inches and replace with coarse sand, cinders or stones.

Early in the spring treat the plants to a dose of weak liquid fertilizer, one containing all the minor elements so that they will not be handicapped by a lack of calcium and magnesium, two elements which are very important to them. Some gardeners give them liquid manure and that should prove as good if the plants indicate by the rich green color of their leaves that the essential minor elements are in sufficient supply.

Try Your Luck With Lilies

conditions are suitable. Recently we saw a fine large clump which had spread from the planting of a single bulb. The soil in this garden was light, the drainage good and the owner a seasoned gardener.

THE importation of the regal lily was a boon to American gardens. It appeared just when the mosaic disease was making inroads into plantings of candidum and other lilies and interest in lily growing was at low ebb. It seems almost disease-resistant and will grow in any garden soil and under almost any growing conditions. There are many fine hybrids which have all the good qualities of the parent.

Other lilies more or less easy to grow in this climate include such fine flowers as the longifolium, a large white lily of the Easter lily type; mychrophyllum, a whitish green lily with yellow throat, growing about 4 feet tall; martagon album, a great favorite among lily growers, and some of the other martagons which range in color to deep red; davidi, a tall red lily with black spots; superbum, an orange Turk's cap that grows to 5-8 feet; henri, another tall variety with brown spotted drooping orange flowers.

'California' Touch Brightens New Home Here

TAKE a Californian out of California and what does he do? If he's anything like Rene Cailliet, or his attractive architect-wife, they create a little bit of California right here in Washington.

The Cailliets purchased an attractive "California Cottage" last November from builder Carl M. Freeman in the Carole Highlands subdivision of New Hampshire extended.

Lovers of outdoor living, the Cailliets went to work. A small rear terrace opening off the large living room was extended to a 15 by 30 foot patio. Dr. Calliet mixed and poured the concrete himself. Four by four beams were sunk 2 feet into the earth, encased in concrete, to serve as foundations for an extensive open roof patio effect.

Vast Patio Effect

A network of 2-by-6-inch beams, extending outward from the house to the supporting beams provide a vast patio effect. The open "roof" over the paved terrace is protected from the weather by thin aluminum sheets nailed to the beams.

Dr. Cailliet, with the Kabat Institute, 2633 16th st. nw., estimated the materials for the whole exterior project cost $90, with all work done by himself during a "vacation" during the last heat wave.

The expansion attic has been finished off by Dr. Cailliet for use by his two sons, 2 and 6, and guests. A prominent feature is the unique roll-away bed. A double bed on box spring, on rollers, is hidden in a cabinet-like area—ready for guests at a moment's notice.

Beautifies First Floor

Mrs. Cailliet, a 1940 University of Southern California graduate, takes top honors in beautifying the first floor with eye-appealing valances in rich colors.

The rear living room wall, featuring large picture windows, is highlighted by a 21-foot valance designed by Mrs. Callliet, using gray and red heavy curtains. The valance is decorated with built-up plywood squares covered with the same red and gray material which is glued and tacked for permanence. Other attractive valances and curtains of different designs, but all done in rich colors, are in the two bedrooms.

Russian Workers Report Building Defects

Moscow, (AP).—A Kuibyshev painter has originated a system of "mutual control" in building construction. Under his innovation the bricklayer inspects the quality of bricks and mortar manufactured by other workers.

Plasterers and carpenters note defects in the bricklaying. The painters criticize the work of carpenters, plasterers, plumbers, electricians and others.

Tass said the system has met with warm support in the building of both houses and other structures.

Wistful?

Moscow, (AP).—A Russian writer, visiting Paris, says he can recognize an American at once.

"They sit at their cafe tables," wrote Poltoratsky in Izvestia, "in careless attitudes, almost putting their feet on the table, in accordance with their habit. They look over the women passing by as a horse dealer looks over horses. Everything is permissible for them."

'Going Native'

THURSDAY afternoon brings this annual, all-Washington revue to the stage of the Capitol Theater. Last week, during rehearsals, the girls and boys took time out for a trip down the Potomac on the Wilson Line's Mount Vernon. Sundecking, left, are Wilhelmina Griedel, Ann Sellers and Lauris McKee

Corwin Looms Large, Lauded or Upbraided

By Sonia Stein

IN ONE of his astonishingly few lapses from literary grace, Norman Corwin recently wrote, "we are gathered around a hot microphone to consider what kind of a bird is the citizen of the world."

CORWIN

To paraphrase radio's internationally known writer - producer - director, we are gathered around a hot typewriter now to consider what kind of a bird is this Norman Corwin. He appears to be an eagle. Whether he's an American eagle or some other kind of eagle seems to have been in hot dispute in some circles last week.

August 8 in the Senate, Corwin was named by Senator McCarran (D., Nev.) as an example of persons who have "gone directly from fields of subversive activity in the United States to the international organization (UN)." He cited a dozen organizations or meetings with which Corwin has been associated which have been called "Communist and subversive" or "Communist front" by the Attorney General.

In reply to McCarran, who is chairman of the Senate Judiciary Subcommittee which has been investigating subversive activity, Corwin said, "I believe I am a vastly better patriot" than McCarran, whom he categorized as a "political mad dog."

Not First Attack

CHIEF of Special Projects, UN Radio, since March of this year, Corwin has been writing about international cooperation and political matters for many years.

Senator McCarran's attack is not the first of this kind under which Corwin has smarted. Several days before the Senator's remarks, Corwin discussed the matter with me.

"I have a kind of love for this country and a respect for its institutions that I have put into circulation to many tens of millions of people. When I have a view I wish to express I don't go to a meeting in a room but say it publicly for all to hear." Many of his scripts, he points out, have been collected and printed with Corwin footnotes by Henry Holt & Co. ("Thirteen by Corwin," "More by Corwin" and "Untitled").

"I have a view of American politics which is based on what I believe in," he explains. "To wit: the American Constitution, the Declaration of Independence and the Bill of Rights, certain other moral precepts mainly Christian and Mosaic in character by which I abide. If out of any or all of these beliefs I am found to be on the side of dissent from a majority view, I think that the motives of the majority can from time to time benefit from searching self-examination," he said.

Won't Back Down

CORWIN dismisses the fact that his name has been associated with several organizations which have lately acquired an unsavory reputation. "If the National Association of Manufacturers tomorrow came out against the poll tax, for a Federal arts bill and for a strengthened UN, I would join or sponsor or contribute to the association," he said, combining in one breath an organization with whose aims he has little in common and three of his own beliefs.

A member of the staff working for the Senate subcommittee, which has photostated copies of letterheads and programs linking Corwin to over 50 organizations, events or radio scripts which the subcommittee considers do not reflect credit on Corwin as an American, doesn't dismiss his associations so easily. "If a man is involved in two or three, he might be innocent but," he continued, shaking his head, "if he's involved in more . . ."

While denying that he is a Communist, Corwin refuses to back down from any stand he has taken, makes "no apology for participating in public discussion on controversial issues." He says, "If at times my beliefs coincide with what is thought by parties outside the pale of respectability it is just too bad. At one time it followed the Communist party line to work for victory but it didn't make one a Communist to work for victory.

"There was a time when Christians were considered subversives and when the founders of this republic were the most dangerous kind of radicals. I for one am glad they did not retreat under pressure from their convictions."

An Artist to Some

BUT enough of Corwin as a political figure.

To some people Corwin is an artist of extraordinary proportions. Invited by the White House to produce the "This Is War" series simultaneously on four networks during the war, given the first "Wendell Willkie One World Award" in 1946, which took him on a trip to 17 countries, and now professionally concerned with the UN, Corwin has let his work become less a reflection of his own poetic talents as it has become more a reflection of world events. His latest production, "Citizen of the World," which was presented on CBS July 10, was a documentary almost entirely devoid of the imaginative language and humor his listeners had come to expect from Corwin.

"I didn't want to compete with the force of the facts," he explains. "It was a job of creative research," in which the juxtaposition of facts and "productional use of statistics" were relied on for dramatic effect.

His next radio script, which will be presented September 11 on NBC as the first of six weekly programs prepared by the UN under Corwin's supervision, may give him a chance to go on a "binge" of fantasy and eloquence. To be broadcast a few days plus 10 years after the blitz on Poland, the script

Saturday at the Met.

Rehearsal Lack Mars Old Operas

By Paul Hume

THE art of singing well in opera these days is often regarded as vanishing.

Those who listen to the Metropolitan Opera from Saturday to Saturday hear performances which range from excellent to the most mediocre. They vary not in one particular, such as the singing of the stars, but in the playing of the orchestra, the choral work, and the total impact of the music.

Lagging spirit in orchestra and chorus can be traced directly to the fact that the Metropolitan fails to give any stage rehearsal to some of the standard works in its repertoire. It is not possible to present Madame Butterfly, Rigoletto, and other works in the regular list of the opera company with no rehearsal throughout a season and still expect singers and conductor to know what will happen in the next measure.

Nor can any orchestra play this precise music and stay with a singer under any conductor without some time being allotted to finding out what is going to happen. There are compensating moments in a season naturally. Those operas which are less familiar or are being revived as novelties come across with the imprint of hours and days of constant study and practice.

Thus in last year's survey by Musical America, Benjamin Britten's Peter Grimes, broadcast by the Metropolitan Opera, was found the most rewarding of all the opera broadcasts of that season. And this past year the Salome of Richard Strauss, sung under the direction of Fritz Reiner, drew the same plaudits.

These opereas are planned and carefully rehearsed in the Metropolitan before being staged. But for every extra rehearsal given

HOLLYWOOD—"Kiss of Fire," which Metro rolls in October, will be set in New Orleans at Mardi Gras time. Jose Iturbi, Mario Lanza and Kathryn Grayson, the trio that made "That Midnight Kiss," will head the cast, with Joe Pasternak producing. Iturbi has just returned to Hollywood from a concert tour. . . . Anne Jeffrey's deal with Metro is getting hotter by the minute. If she signs a contract with that studio, her first picture will be a Technicolor musical for producer Arthur Freed. Anne has a run-of-the-show contract with "Kiss Me, Kate," and won't be free for movies until next June.

Walt Disney will be back in Hollywood on August 29. Before leaving England he signed John Gregson, London stage actor, and Geoffrey Wilkinson, one of England's famous Pucks, for roles in "Treasure Island." England's hot weather hasn't slowed down production on the picture. The company has been shooting on the British seacoast, and Director Bryon Haskin hopes to have the film finished by October.

Rita Hayworth's doctor, Blake Watson, tells us he is not flying to Cannes, France, as reported elsewhere. Dr. Watson says, "I have nothing definite from Rita."

Last year when Spike Jones played Chicago, Chester Gould, creator of the comic strip Dick Tracy, dresed up as a city slicker and sat in with the band. When Spike picked up the Sunday funnies, he was flabbergasted and pleased to find himself characterized as a guy named Spike Dyke in the strip.

Adele Mara gets a break in "The Sands of Iwo Jima"—she's the only girl in a large cast . . . John Wayne, who plays a tough sergeant in the same picture, says, "I've been in the infantry, the cavalry, the Navy, Air Corps, and Seabees, and all with a rank of at least lieutenant. I figure I finally got enough basic training and points to be a sergeant in the Marine Corps." Wayne has no immediate unemployment worries, what with a one-picture-a-year contract with four outfits—Warners, Republic, Argosy and RKO.

ADELE

Betty Hutton has been spending her days having costume fittings and doing song rehearsals for "Annie Get Your Gun," which gets the gun in late September. Betty tells us her work is cut out for her for months in advance. From "Let's Dance," with Fred Astaire, she trips into "Annie" with Howard Keel; then gets David Niven as her co-star in a comedy about Theda Bara, vamp of the silent movies.

Betty has just received the script on the "Bara" story and was bubbling over about it. "You see," she said, "the opening shot shows this character I play lying on a bearskin rug." Then she got down on the floor to illustrate the sirenish pose. "You see," Betty continued, "she's rehearsing how to vamp a man when David Niven walks in to meet her for the first time."

From the Hopper

OUR BOSS cables from Firenza, Italy:

Missed the film festival in Venice to follow the "September" company here, and want to go on record as saying that Bill Dieterle is the world's greatest director. Seven locations were shot for the picture in one day. The cast is up at 5 a.m. and works until 7 p.m.

Blue-Eyed Blonde

Film Cinderella Rises From the Rubble of Berlin

BERLIN (AP).—Hollywood has discovered a new Cinderella—in the rubble of Berlin.

The movie magic that transforms an unknown into a star is touching Cornella Burch, 24, lissome, blue-eyed and blonde.

Last year she got her first bit in a local German film that nobody abroad has ever seen. Now she is the leading lady in a (20th Century-Fox) feature which will have world-wide screening.

Yet Cornella didn't go nearer Hollywood than Potsdamer Platz. Producer William Perlberg and Director-Writer George Seaton came right to her bomb-scarred doorstep.

They cast her after she laughed and cried in front of a test camera on a dilapidated sound stage near Tempelhof Airfield.

They tried her without makeup, her hair wind-tossed, her clothes limited to an average fraulein's skimpy wardrobe. "No phony glamour," they said.

'Celluloid Sesqui' Confronts Capital

By Richard L. Coe

NINETEEN FIFTY: See yourself this time next year. The scene is Washington, the Capital's 150th year, for which Congress may yet appropriate—a stamp.

At this writing, it looks as though the many tentative plans for a bang-up celebration are off. The fact remains, there will be observances of some sort, however, and that there will be more visitors than usual for the Federal city's 150th birthday.

No matter how pointedly the Congress may wish to ignore Washington, D. C.'s, birthday, you can count on more postcards being sent to Kalamazoo and Dead Man's Gulch, to Portland, Me., and Portland, Oreg., to the ends of the earth than have been sent this year.

Some of those visitors will be yours and you'll be proud to show 'em around—the Monument, the Memorial, Rock Creek and the wide avenues. One night you'll have a party or you'll tour them around our own city of light.

And one night some of them will ask you to take them to the theater. No, not the movies; they saw the picture at home or else they will.

That Painful Subject

THEY'VE heard of the National and you'll have to explain.

It doesn't mean National Theater, at all, you explain; that just happens to be its name.

What's the play?

Well, we don't have plays any more at the National. It's closed because a diplomat from Africa, a businessman from India and some Americans from anywhere didn't used to be admitted. That's all there is to it, so the National is out, as live theater.

What about that theater you pointed out near the White House?

Well, that's a theater building on the site, but actually it's a storehouse for files and some time in the future, you don't know when, we're going to tear that down and that historic old house next door, the one I told you Dolly Madison used to live in.

What's at that auditorium you pointed out?

Well, that's not really an auditorium. It was once, but not a good one and now it's a government office.

What's at that place of the Daughters of the American Revolution, isn't that Constitution Hall?

Yes, but that's a concert hall. It has a platform, but that's only a joke when it comes to giving operas or plays. It got to be too silly.

Rained Out

HOW about that Meridian Hill Park open air theater you pointed out?

Ladies Hold Broadway Spotlight

By Mark Barron

NEW YORK (AP).—As the new Broadway theatrical season approaches its September 6 opening, it is evident there will be a predominantly distaff side program in the new stage wares to be revealed this fall and winter. Very few outstanding male stars are listed for the new shows; the majority of leading roles go to the girls.

Robert Morley may return from his Australian tour to play the starring role in Jean Dalrymple's production of Bernard Shaw's new play, "Buoyant Billions." Lee Tracy is scheduled to come back from Hollywood to take the leading role in "Where We Came In."

Elliott Nugent, dry-faced comedian, will be on hand to direct and play the leading role of a newspaperman in "The Fundamental George," a comedy by Max Wylie and John C. Gibbs. Alfred Lunt and Emelyn Williams will be in other new plays, and that about concludes the roster of male stars scheduled to be seen early in the season.

Scheduled for leading roles in new attractions now in process of production are Lynn Fontanne, Katharine Cornell, Nanette Fabray, Jane Pickens, Katharine Hepburn, Helen Hayes, Gertrude Lawrence, Leueen McGrath, Barbara Bel Geddes, Diana Barrymore and Carol Channing.

Miss Fontanne arrives, after extensive travels, at the Shubert Theater October 13 to appear opposite her director-actor husband, Lunt, in the leading role of a French play, "I Know My Love."

Miss Cornell has another of her historical roles and one which appears an exhausting, dynamic one. In "That Lady" she will be surrounded by the court of Philip II in sixteenth century Spain.

Helen Hayes is another feminine star who has been doing considerable touring with her new vehicle, "Good Housekeeping," before revealing it to Rialto audiences. She is playing this William McCleery comedy at numerous summer theaters, including Washington's Olney, but has not yet set a date for its Broadway first night.

When Katharine Hepburn opens in a revival of "As You Like It" in November with Michael Benthall directing, you may be sure that every Broadway feminine star will be watching its reception like bird dogs watching a quail. If she has a hit, then you can be assured the new season will be showered with Shakespearean revivals.

Diana Barrymore is scheduled for a new comedy, "Collector's Item;" Gertrude Lawrence will be in a new S. N. Behrman comedy; Leueen McGrath will be in a dramatization of the Henry James novel, "The Turn of the Screw," and Tallulah Bankhead will be in "Lily Henry," a psychological drama.

Berlin Unknown Gets Leading Role in Film

CORNELLA ADJUSTS IT, HOLLYWOOD STYLE
. . . on her way to fame

"You're playing a war-impoverished German girl in this busted-up city. So you'll have to look like one."

Perlberg and Seaton are still debating a final title for the film. But whatever the name, it's about battered Berlin, and the Americans who outflew the Soviet blockade.

Montgomery Clift and Paul Douglas are the only professional American actors in the cast. They are supported by more than 40 veterans of the airlift, given time off by Lieut. Gen. John K. Cannon.

Cornella is out to demonstrate that a Cinderella can have a level head. Her contract—seven years at a rising scale of from $250 to $2000 a week—depends on whether she makes good in her part.

Her real name is Gerlind Borchers; she was born in Hanover, and she has never traveled outside her native land. Her father was an army officer in the first World War and taught history and modern languages until his death in 1935. She speaks faultless English with a transplanted Oxford accent.

Forsook Medicine

CORNELLA studied medicine at Goettingen University to satisfy her mother's wishes, but finally gave it up to take a theatrical course in Berlin. Acting has always been her ambition.

She says she's only been very frightened twice in her life. Once was when American tanks approached the German military hospital where she was nursing in April, 1925. Nazi propagandists had warned that the Yankee barbarians committed indescribable atrocities. But the tank crews handed out some candy and cigarettes instead.

Her second fright was when she was selected for the present role.

"The thought that so much of my future was at stake was a great strain at first," she recalls.

"But Mr. Seaton and Mr. Perlberg have been very kind and understanding. My only real difficulty up to now seems to be liquidating my British accent. Mr. Seaton's wife, Lillian Loughton, has been coaching me in American diction almost day and night."

'The Male Animal'

TOM EWELL, one of the entertainment world's latest white-haired boys, is taking time between his first two pictures to star this week at Meridian Hill Park in "The Male Animal."

TOM EWELL

The James Thurber-Elliott Nugent comedy about a professor's amusing battle with football-conscious trustees is one of the most popular in recent years.

Ewell has just completed a featured role with Katharine Hepburn and Spencer Tracy in "Adam's Rib" at Metro and shortly after his Washington week is due back in Hollywood for Paramount's "Mr. Music" and Bing Crosby.

The Ewell success on the New York stage came after many dogged tries. Before entering the Navy, he'd been in 25 flops within a few seasons. His first post-uniform part was in "John Loves Mary," a sensation from the first. Last season he starred in "Small Wonder," the musical revue which marveled how man manages to live through the minor catastrophies which daily beset him.

It's a Players' Reunion

THIS WEEK'S bill brings a reunion to the Olney Theater of theater people whose roles in the play are the same as they were in New York.

"For Love or Money" is the comedy, by Hugh Herbert, with Vicki Cummings, John Loder and Maida Reade playing the roles they had in the original company and with Harry Ellerbe once more their director as he was at the first rehearsals.

For another member of the company, June Dayton, the play offers a role which brought reviewers' applause to June Lockhart sending her to Hollywood. Miss Dayton, who has scored increasingly with her varied Olney roles, has a fine opportunity as the Herbert ingenue.

This afternoon and tonight conclude the Olney run of "Charm," with Dean Harens and Paula Trueman in the top roles.

Theater Time Table

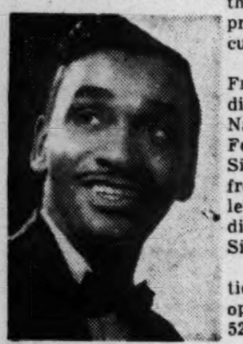
The Music Box

Negro Opera Group In Week-Long Event

THIS week the National Negro Opera Company presents its annual opera meet and exhibit.

Programs open today with a mass meeting in Lincoln Congregational Temple, 11th and R sts. nw. Throughout the week there will be choral programs, artist nights and discussion meetings.



REED

Climax of the festival comes Friday evening in Griffith Stadium in a program headlined by Napoleon Reed, Robert McFerrin, Bertha Bragg, Noble Sissle and many others. Excerpts from Aida, Trovatore, and Rigoletto will be sung. Sissle will direct the pageant, "This Is a Sin-Tryin' World."

All details on programs and tickets can be secured from the opera headquarters, Decatur 5232.

THIS week brings the service band pragrams on the east steps of the Capitol to a close. Friday night's Army Band program there will wind up the popular series. Tonight's soloist with the Air Force Band will be Miss Jean Mason, 1949 winner of the $1000 scholarship to Florida Southern College given by Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt Whitney.

LAST week's announcement of coordinated piano instruction being offered the pupils of Arlington public schools brings comment from Dr. Edwin N. C. Barnes. Dr. Barnes was for many years head of music in Washington public schools.

He points out that he organized community classes in piano in 1922 when he came to the Washington schools. Arlington's plans differ from the teaching offered under Dr. Barnes' regime in that the Arlington pupils will study piano on released time from school, and all teachers involved in the plan will use the same teaching methods.

Furthermore, they will have completed a special course in methods and instruction before beginning the new courses. The community classes in piano begun by Dr. Barnes are still going strong, and will enter their twenty-eighth season this fall. Mrs. Mabel C. Barnes is manager of classes.

THE New York Avenue Presbyterian Church choir will sing a memorial concert for Dr. Peter Marshall today at 4:30 p. m. at the Bible Conference, Massanetta Springs, Va. Dr. Marshall spoke at the conference for the last 12 years of his life. Charles Dana Beaschler will direct the choir.

FOR the second year in succession, the Winchester, Va., Exchange Club wil sponsor a concert in that city by the National Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Howard Mitchell.

Last year's concert by the orchestra netted a profit of $1250 for the club, which it turned over to the Community Chest drive there.

Rehearsal Essential To Opera Standbys

Peter Grimes or Salome, a rehearsal must be taken from Rigoletto, or Traviata.

This condition has many effects. A soprano who has sung Madame Butterfly at the Met, and has had rehearsals on the role, will keep on singing it to the exclusion of other members of the company who might be as good or better in the part. But a second soprano does not care to undertake the role without the benefit of stage rehearsals which she is denied because the opera has been prepared with Miss So—and—so in the part.

Almost Insoluble

The same thing applies to the orchestra in even greater degree. No orchestra under any conductor can play adequately the difficult music of Verdi's Rigoletto, Othello, Aida, or Trovatore without sufficient rehearsing. Still less can they handle the requirements of Mozart, Wagner, or Bizet unless there has been proper advance coaching.

When it comes to the singing of the principals, the problem today seems almost insoluble. Opera takes good voices. Good voices can be made to sound well in relatively few lessons. Once these voices have reached the point where they sound smooth in standard passages, their owners can make money on the radio, and in the happy mazes of the organized concert field.

It is no longer necessary for singers to master every phase of their art before they win the right to appear in leading opera roles. There are singers in leading roles at the Metropolitan Opera today who would never have found their way beyond the chorus in decades past.

The Metropolitan knows this and so do those who sing there. It is no longer the goal of many younger American singers who find the racket too messy to invade. There are other opportunities for rising singers and the brighter ones are turning to them.

Encouraging Sign

ONE of these singers was heard in Washington in the last two weeks in Fortune Gallo's San Carlo Opera Company. Mina Cravi is one of the loveliest lyric sopranos now singing in opera in this country.

Her Mimi, Micaela, Marguerite, and Nedda are the finest of any now before the public. Only one Metropolitan soprano could compete with her in all these roles: Bidu Sayo, and she does not command the same dramatic range that Cravi can summon.

Cravi is the most encouraging sign I have seen in a decade of wondering what was happening to opera singers. She understands every nuance of her roles, which number many more than the four she sang here.

Her voice is perfectly placed and she uses it superbly. She sounds in short, like the opera singers in the days of Bori, or Muzio, when a singer was more concerned about her voice than her figure, and more interested in how beautifully she could produce a tone than in how loudly she could toss it out.

Every time Cravi appeared on the stage she brought it a warmth and human quality which it otherwise lacked. She restores to Micaela's duets and aria the dignity of which they have long been robbed. She makes Marguerite reasonable and pardonable rather than weak and craven as so many sopranos have since Rethberg gave up the role. These things are done not by acting but with the voice.

Singing Is the Lure

PEOPLE do not go to opera for acting—they go for singing. They always have and they always will. It is great voices that have brought the long lines of standees to ticket offices. It is great voices that have brought shouts from the audiences in the past. And people know and spot a great singer the instant they hear them today just as much as in the past.

The recordings of Tiana Lemnitz, who has never sung in this country, are treasured by those who know them because of her powerful singing. Two dozen mighty discs made by Claudia Muzio just six weeks before her untimely death are still in high demand by lovers of peerless vocalism. If Rosa Ponselle returns to the concert or opera stage, she will be heralded by those who remember her pure, golden voice.

Today we see singers throwing themselves around the stage in desperate attempts to cover up vocal deficiencies. We hear them unable to encompass notes written for their voices in standard operas. It is when a Mina Cravi comes along that we realize what we used to hear as a regular thing. And we must be thankful to the rare Cravis and their teachers that such miracles can still happen.

Alumni Raise $270,500

Northwestern, University alumni have contributed $270,500 to its support since September, Rockwell F. Clancy, chairman of the Alumni Century Fund, reported last week. A check for this amount was presented to Franklyn B. Snyder, president of the university. The sum represents contributions of 5000 alumni.

CHICAGO (AP).—Some day composers won't write music and musicians won't play it—yet fans will enjoy it in never-before-heard perfection.

The composer or artist will simply project it by brain waves—"thought transference," says Raymond Scott.

This man, who thinks in terms of electronics and music, thinks that is al quite possible.

"Brains put out electrical waves," Scott said in an interview. "I wouldn't be at all surprised if some day it were possible to do away with links in music, such as writing it out and playing the notes. You'll just be able to think it.

"Imagine fastening electrodes to your head, inviting some people to your home and then thinking your music. If you wanted 1000 violins you could have them—and if you wanted the bass fiddle to play piccolo parts, you could do that, too."

Scott says even recordings will carry, instead of musical sound, the brain waves of the composer. No arrangers. No rehearsals.

Two Loves

SCOTT is a New Yorker who spent most of his adult life working on new developments in his two loves, music and electronics. He maintains a permanent electronics research laboratory in New York, while he composes music and directs his bands for radio shows and night club appearances. His musical theories have always been off-beat.

He has been appearing at the Blue Note, a Chicago jazz spot. But Scott is the first to admit his music isn't jazz. Instead, it's in a category he calls "quite undefinable."

For instance, some of his favorite compositions have these titles:

"Dedicatory piece to the crew and passenger of the first experimental rocket ship to the moon"; "A visit with one of the editors of National Geographic magazine in which he takes his honored guests on a conversational tour of an East Indian village and during which time a block party happens to be in progress"; another—tersely—"Phfft."

Dry Room

WHILE waiting for musical telepathy to become commonplace, Scott suggests that music meanwhile can be played satisfactorily only in a dry room with a temperature of 45 degrees or lower.

"Instruments don't speak with clarity in a warm, muggy atmosphere," he declared. "As for the audience—maybe you could lead them through a gradual freezing chamber, like a decompression chamber for divers."

When he isn't turning up the air conditioning, Scott leads a seven-man "quintet," currently on a Midwestern tour.

And in his spare time—with record prices dropping all over the Nation—he heads a new record firm which plans to issue his own disks at $2 each.

"I've always liked the idea of a $2 record," Scott says unworriedly.

The Record Player

Cossack Set Unstrained And Varied

DON COSSACK CONCERT. Don Cossack Chorus, Serge Jaroff, conductor. Columbia 844, $5.

For some reason this set seems unusually enjoyable. It may be the variety of music presented, or it may be that the chorus was in especially good form when it recorded these things.

There have been many Don Cossack records before this, but this one appeals to me with particular emphasis. The set includes a Lord's Prayer, Holy God, and Blessed Art Thou, O Lord, in religious vein. Folk songs include the familiar Twelve Robbers, The Sailors, and On Saturday. From Rimsky-Korsakoff's opera, Sadko, the men sing the Song of India, correctly known as the Song of the Indian Guest. The tone and balance of the chorus are fine throughout, and there is none of that strained sound which sometimes spoils their work.

Arr. Harty: My Lagan Love; also: Blow Me Eyes. Christopher Lynch, tenor, with Eugene Bossart, pianist. Columbia 7637-M. $1.

The Lagan Love is one of the loveliest Irish songs and Sir Hamilton was probably the finest musician Ireland ever produced. He knew how to arrange the song without interfering with its simplicity. And Lynch can sing it perfectly, too. Why doesn't he record an album of these songs and sing them in the Gaelic tongue they deserve? These are Irish songs we should hear rather than the "Mother of Mine" variety.

The "Blow Me Eyes" is not so good a song and it certainly is not Lynch's dish. He tries hard, but this belongs more to the big, blustery baritone school. "Lagan Love" makes the record worth getting.

Dick Haymes To Rejoin CBS

Singer Dick Haymes, who has been away from radio as a regular for a couple of seasons, is coming back to CBS. He has been signed to replace Bob Crosby when that sponsored series returns from vacation August 29. It runs Mondays through Fridays . . . To be added to the ABC summer list this week is another of those radio dramas classified as "domestic situation comedy." It will be Thursday nights under the title of "First Hundred Years."

D. C. Outlook Somber for Live Theater

It's raining. The show's off.

Where is this Olney you mention?

Easy to get to if you have a car. We don't.

How about the universities?

Well, George Washington University has an auditorium but it doesn't give plays except the university type. And Catholic University's speech and drama group isn't working tonight.

Gosh. You mean to tell me this is Washington's 150th year and there's not any theater?

Yup, you tell them—the man from Madison, Wisconsin, where the Lunts break records every year, the girl from Dallas, the friends from Chicago, Los Angeles, Nashville and Wilmington, the visitors from England, France, Germany, Scandinavia, China and Pakistan.

You realize it's not a violently vital matter. There are other things to be proud of, other things to do. Still, it gets a bit thick explaining.

And your Congressmen and your State Department officials and your White House occupants make the same excuses and everyone, in short, gets tired of the whole business, including columnists who write about it and faithful readers who go mad reading about it.

Come back, now, to 1949.

Could Be Done

CONGRESS is in session. Several bills have been introduced to try to open a theater in Washington, none of them satisfactory until the Douglas-Baldwin bill in the Senate, or the Sabath-Herter bill in the House is enacted into law.

This—for they're virtually the same—is a practical measure. It wouldn't cost the taxpayers a cent. It simply asks that the Belasco Theater, now a file cabinet, be turned over to the American National Theater and Academy.

This outfit—nicknamed ANTA and sponsored by a previous Congress—has guaranteed to refurbish the theater. Wealthy men have assured they will donate the funds to redecorate it in proper style, leaning to the 1810 period which has been announced as the plan for the inner shell of the White House.

It's not so large as it might be, but big enough, according to theater men who want a Washington showcase.

The Senate and House bills, which have nothing to do with the segregation issue, have excellent sponsorship and growing congressional suuport.

There are several ways of getting the bills through parlimentary procedures the lawmakers understand. But unless the Douglas-Baldwin-Sabath-Herter bill is passed before adjournment of the current session it will be too late for the American National Theater and Academy to refurbish the Belasco until another year has rolled by.

If the bill is not pushed hard this session, our embarrassing excuses will be repeated for one more weary year.

Centennial Show

Some of Thayer's Best Are Absent

By Jane Watson Crane

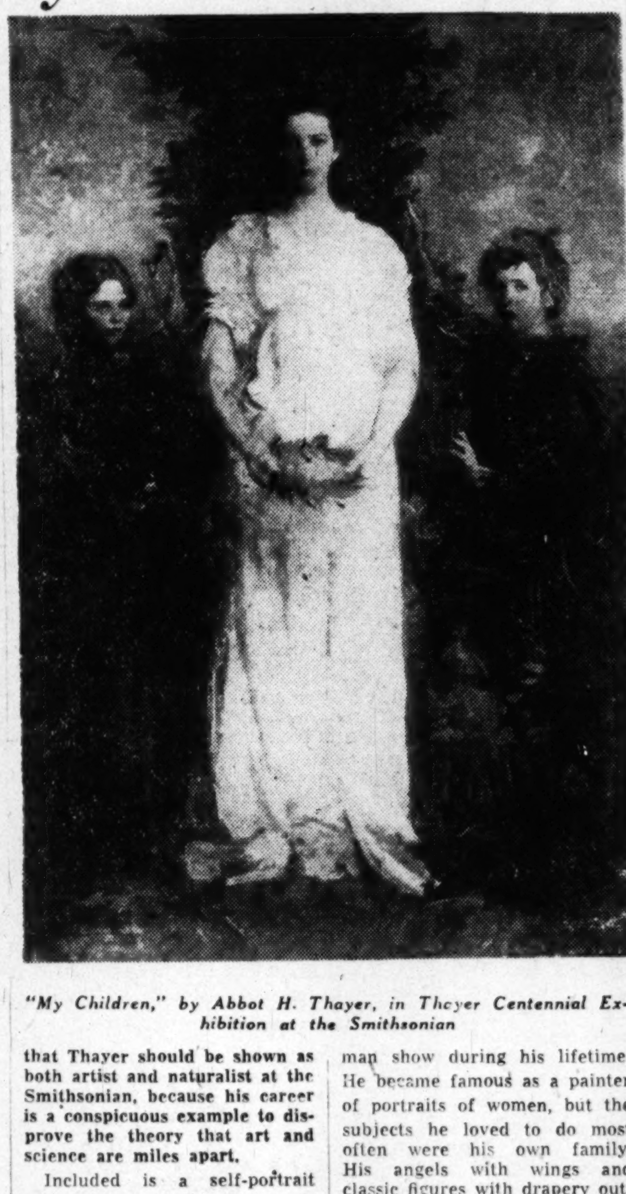
A VISIT to the Abbott Thayer Centennial Exhibition of the Smithsonian is a journey out of the world of the present, in time and spirit. The opening, attended by members of his family, was held on the 100th anniversary of his birth, August 12, 1849. The exhibition, held jointly in the Natural History Building and the Freer Gallery, will continue through December. It commemorates a peculiarly American genius, a man who was painter, naturalist and teacher.

After his death in 1921, Thayer was honored with memorial shows at the Metropolitan Museum in New York and the Corcoran in Washington. Absent from these exhibits were the paintings (some of his finest) in the Freer collection of the Smithsonian, anchored there by the weight of law. The other outstanding collection, belonging to John Gellatly, was represented in the memorial shows and later, in 1929, given to another branch of the Smithsonian, the National Collection of Fine Arts. It too is no longer mobile.

Although both belonging to the Nation and part of the same institution, the two collections of Thayer paintings could not be brought together. Each is shown in its separate home on the Mall. They are joined only in a collection of color slides at the museum, placed close to the entrance on the ground floor and well worth studying to get a sense of what would be the effect of the whole. The Gellatly paintings are in the main gallery on the first floor, assembled as a unit but in a room with other paintings. The paintings in the Freer are in Gallery Four, there being just under 40 altogether.

Natural Coloration

AMONG other items which Thomas Beggs in charge of the National Collection of Fine Arts, has assembled for the Centennial display are some of the results of the studies made by Abbott Thayer on the natural protective coloration of animals and birds, a contribution to science which had practical application in the advancement of war camouflage. These he began to develop around the early 1900's, well before World War I. In 1922 an exhibit of work in this field by Abbott Thayer and his son, Gerald, was shown at the Brooklyn Museum. Some of this material was gotten together by his son-in-law and is on display. Eye-catchers are the ingenious stenciled cut-outs in the shapes of living creatures, to be applied to paintings of their natural surroundings for comparison with facsimiles of their own protective markings and coloration. Also shown are some of Thayer's writings on nature.



"My Children," by Abbot H. Thayer, in Thayer Centennial Exhibition at the Smithsonian

It seems particularly fitting that Thayer should be shown as both artist and naturalist at the Smithsonian, because his career is a conspicuous example to disprove the theory that art and science are miles apart.

Included is a self-portrait painted during the last year of the artist's life. Lent by Walter Seaton of Woodstock, it was found by him in a barn under old canvases that had been tacked upon the wood panel. The family tells similar anecdotes of discoveries, most spectacular of which is the "Half-Draped Figure" now in the Gellatly, which was found on a rolled-up canvas after the painter's death. Perhaps more paintings will come to light in time. Evidently the painter was in the habit of keeping a number of works going at once, and many were left as sketches.

Rarely Showed

AT A time when artists sometimes scramble to have several one-man shows a year, it is worth noting that Abbott Thayer rarely, if ever, had a one-man show during his lifetime. He became famous as a painter of portraits of women, but the subjects he loved to do most often were his own family. His angels with wings and classic figures with drapery outwardly at least fitted the cult of beauty raging at the time. Royal Cortissoz held him a prime exponent.

But certainly his paintings reveal a quest for something deeper than the generally accepted formulae. He was not concerned with form and color as ends in themselves, nor with many of the other preoccupations which have become ruling passions since the cubists, Cezanne and their followers pointed new directions. Nor could you say that Thayer was dedicated to an inner search of his own, to express visually in the forms of the era the things which he saw and felt most deeply. His paintings in mood and manner are apart from current trends. Perhaps they would be impossible in times like the present.

Joe Cotten, who co-stars with Joan Fontaine in the picture, is in a stew. His clothes are still on the boat. Or maybe I should say most of his clothes. Joan's very gay and is having the time of her life.

The Italian film honeymoon will be over this year, I believe. It's too costly for American companies to make pictures here, and too difficult. And Hollywood no longer wants to let its minor executives live like Caesars for their own glorification. The day of Caesar has passed.

Grover Magnin took his own Scotch along to Paris . . . Orson Welles blew into Rome and was met by no one. He flew into a rage and yelled: "I've got 11 people working for me and not one had the decency to come down and meet me!" A friend asked, "But have you paid them?" "No," said Orson, "but they should show me that respect. When I was working for Darryl Zanuck in 'Prince of Foxes' he put three men at my disposal. Why anybody, especially a fool like me, wants to be a producer instead of an actor, is beyond me." HEDDA.

Art Notes

Show by Nura At U. N. Club

THE first exhibition in the autumn at the United Nations Club will be of paintings by Nura, a New York artist well known for her piquant and decorative style of painting. She is author and illustrator of a number of books for children. Nura's full name is Nura Woodson Ulreich. Her husband, Edward Buk Ulreich, is also an artist.

Following this exhibit there will be a show by the German-born artist, Lux Feininger. During the summer months the club is hanging single works by local artists. The exhibition program is directed by Agnes Delano, chairman of the art committee.

Cornelia R. Yuditsky, director of the Creative Art Studio and former head of the Children's Art Center, has moved into new quarters at 1913 Eye st. nw. In June an exhibition of work by her students was held at the headquarters of the American Veterans Committee.

FM Broadcasters Say TV Helps Them

By the Associated Press

THE EFFECTS of television on standard radio are hotly debated, but frequency modulation radio broadcasters say it's helping them.

The reason is this:

It's fairly simple and inexpensive for a television manufacturer to equip his set so it also will tune in frequency modulation radio—much cheaper than to incorporate standard radio. And nearly one-fourth the television sets now coming off the lines have FM radio.

This adds to the audience of FM stations. One of the biggest handicaps FM broadcasters have had in trying to sell time to sponsors has been the small number of radio sets equipped to receive their static-less, high fidelity signals.

At the start, only a few television sets had FM radio and would not bring in any radio stations at all. Of course, fourth-fifths of those being produced still won't, but the percentage with FM radio is increasing.

Many prospective television purchasers get the idea all video sets will bring in FM stations because television uses the FM system for its sound.

While a video set won't tune in FM radio stations unless equipped to do so, there is a close connection.

The FM band of frequencies is located between the lower and upper bands of frequencies now assigned to television. The fact that television uses FM for its sound further simplifies addition of FM radio to a television set.

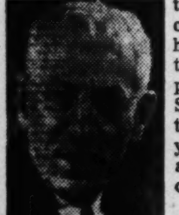
Don't Expect to Get Your Stamp Lots Free of Tax

By William M. Stuart

THE present sales tax, now operating in the District of Columbia will affect stamp collectors as well as dealers. A report that United States postage stamps, being Government securities, may not be taxed is not to be taken seriously. Tax authorities of the District are in a position to handle any tax concerning stamps, therefore the only means of avoiding payment is to cease purchasing United States and foreign stamps. The sales tax is unpopular among certain groups yet it has been operated at times to advantage where additional funds became necessary for certain purposes.



STUART

Stamp business in Washington is not considered a small affair by any means and has been most profitable for many years. There is no question of dealers or collectors not obeying the law in detail, even though they do not relish such a law.

Aside from tax collections for stamp purchases other activities in stamp clubs must be considered. For instance, auction sales must be taxed as well as stamps bought on club circuits. This also includes the Bourse—a leading feature in many clubs. In stamp transactions of every kind the club must assume full responsibility for tax collections if the law is to be strictly obeyed. Stamp collectors are for law enforcement, even including the new sales tax.

THE establishment of the first rural delivery route in Alaska is announced by the Post Office Department for October 1. The route is to emanate from Ketchikan. Up to this time there has been no rural delivery service in Alaska. The route will require 51.2 miles of travel and will serve the entire length of the Tongass Highway on Revillegigedo Island. Some 363 rural families will be served.

Air mail service will be inaugurated over segment 3 of route AM-79, between Albany, N. Y.; Pittsfield, Northampton, Springfield, Southbridge, Worcester, Framingham and Boston, Mass. Special cachets will be provided. Service at Northampton, Southbridge and Framingham will not be inaugurated at this time. There will be no provision made for point-to-point covers. Backstamping will be given if requested.

Those interested in special slogan cancellations may obtain the following by sending self-addressed prepaid envelopes to the postmaster, Marblehead, Mass. The cancellation, "300th Anniversary 1649-1949," will be in use for the remainder of the calendar year.

The Post Office Department has announced that there are available issues of 3-cent Washington and Lee, 3-cent Puerto Rico, 6-cent Alexandria and 3-cent Annapolis commemoratives for all postmasters who requisition the same.

Thoughts on Corwin, Stormy Petrel

will describe the future we could have if we choose to blitz poverty, disease, famine, etc.

"We go on a kind of a bat and project ourselves into the future to Anniversary X when we are celebrating the blitz on these things," he says. There is no exact date for Anniversary X but Corwin refuses to make it more than one generation later.

Matter of Titles

FOR A TITLE he first considered "Not So Wild a Dream," a phrase he conjured up for "On a Note of Triumph," with which CBS marked V-E Day. This he vetoed lest it be confused with Eric Sevareid's book and because "people might think I was afflicted with Narcissism, and sat around contemplating my own umbilicus if I think my phrases are so good I use them twice."

"Anniversary X" he liked for its air of mystery, but this has been discarded—for the moment at least—in favor of "Could Be."

If he does get gay with the language in this new script it may be a wonderful thing. It is not without reason that at 39 Corwin has won so many awards, including one for satirizing radio, that official lists now include only the most important 18.

It is not without reason that John Mason Brown said, "Mr. Corwin's mind, his style, his conscience, have muscles."

Nor that Clifton Fadiman has called him radio's only first-rate imaginative writer who "will try anything—whimsey, fantasy, historical drama, conversation piece, propaganda, satire, scientific lecture, dramatic canticle, burlesque parody—and in a variety of styles from the cracker-box vernacular to the (I fear), pseudo-Miltonic."

CORWIN has had his literary critics, to be sure. Following presentation of the ambitious 60-minute "On a Note of Triumph," which some critics called powerful, warm, exciting, stately, and magnificent, Bernard De Voto of Harper's Magazine accused him of "bargain-counter jauntiness, semiclever talkativeness . . . a rhetoric so flip that it degrades the emotions presumed to have created it."

Very sensitive to criticism, although he heaps abuse on some of his own scripts, he has this to say of some critics: "It is amusing to watch these snobs at work on the corpus, like Lilliputians hacking away at a fairly somnolent Gulliver. One of them dismissed MacLeish's verse dramas with a single phrase, 'incantations for the radio.' Another . . . deplored the wide popularity of a verse documentary for its 'vulgar mass expression.' Nobody except other snobs pays attention to this sort of thing and it sputters along harmlessly."

However, there are other critics whose sputterings are not harmless and whom Corwin despises.

A profile piece on Corwin, "The Odyssey of the Oblong Blur" by Philip Hamburger, which was printed in the New Yorker, is Corwin's idea of unfair journalism. He resents it, not because it is written in exaggerated psuedo-Corwin style, but because he feels Hamburger picked maliciously from among the facts.

He pointed out, for example, that Corwin's apartment hallway was littered with "bottles, jars, and tubes, lotions, gargles, aspirin, salves, sulfas, pills and poultices." Says Corwin wearily, "The bathroom had just been painted. You dump the contents of your medicine chest in the front hall and you'll look like a hypochrondriac, too."

Criticised for personal mannerisms or occasional instances of poor writing, Corwin's attitude is, "Either I contributed something to radio or I didn't." As the first and only radio writer to be awarded a grant by the American Academy of Arts and Letters, he says he thinks he probably has.

Worked in Hollywood

CORWIN has just finished a stint in Hollywood catching up on committments there. He regards Hollywood as "pleasant with reservations" or "unpleasant with compensations." He says that "the detail of a man making $400 a day automatically alienates your sympathy with his anguish . . . It's true that a sensitive person may shudder at the prospect of going to Pickfair dressed as an outrigger canoe, but how salty can your tears be for such a person?" Corwin himself did not make $400 a day, although he did on one occasion make $10,000 for a 10-day assignment. Called in to write one of the many versions of a picture still to be produced, Corwin says, "I don't know if one of my $10,000 words is left by this time."

Like any man of his artistic stature, Corwin has attracted disciples but he has refused to exploit their eagerly tendered services. "Perhaps I was too old when I got into this to be taken in by such things," remarks Corwin, who spent 10 years as a newspaper reporter in Greenfield and Springfield, Mass., before getting into radio via CBS' kind interest when he was 28.

"I don't enjoy having somebody thrust an ashtray at me when I appear to be ready to drop an ash," he said, springing out of a plywood, functional chair with a large enamel ashtray by way of demonstration. "But there are times when things are going badly, when it might be encouraging to have them around," he admits.

How To, and Also How Not To, Get on a Radio Quiz Program

By Hal Boyle

NEW YORK (AP).—One lady in radio studio audience waved some lingerie over her head. Another held up a live squawking chicken.

They were trying to attract the attention of an announcer selecting contestants from the audience to appear on a quiz program.

"But that isn't the way to get on a quiz show," agreed Mark Goodson and Bill Todman. "We aren't looking for screwballs."

These two young men—both under 40—are authorities on how to be chosen to appear on the radio giveaways. They've picked thousands of contestants for the five CBS network quiz shows they produce—Stop the Music, Winner Take All, Hit the Jackpot, Beat the Clock and Spin to Win.

"We're not looking for the greatest brains in the studio," said Todman. "We're looking for nice people the audience will like."

"Yes," said Goodson. "We want to avoid people who are off balance. There is a very thin line between the pleasant extrovert and the real screwball, who may do anything once he gets on the air."

THE art in getting selected as a contestant lies in attracting the announcer's eye without scaring him away by being too brash or anxious.

"A bald man is more likely to be picked, for example, than a man with hair," said Goodson. "But if he is wearing a necktie that flashes off and on like an electric sign, we don't want him. He's trying too hard."

Women wearing white gloves and a large hat also are likely to be chosen merely because they stand out to the announcer as he passes through the audience in the pre-program warmup period looking for contestants. But a woman wearing flashy jewelry is automatically rejected.

"People don't like to see anyone win money who already looks as if he had more than he needed," explained Goodson.

The producers make every attempt to keep from putting on "semi-pros"—men or women with little to do who go from studio to studio trying to get on as many programs as possible. They also turn down anyone who, when asked why he wants to be a contestant, replies "to win a prize."

"He may be completely honest," said Goodson, "but the listeners often get the impression such a person is too selfish."

OVER the years the producers have found that housewives often make better contestants than college teachers.

"The housewife doesn't feel she has to prove she's smart, so she is more relaxed," said Todman.

They also have learned that men or women from the South or Southwest part of America make the best contestants on a geographic basis.

"It isn't that they are any more intelligent or better informed," remarked Goodson. "They are simply more friendly and homey-talking.

"The New Englander is often too laconic—too brief in his answers. On the other hand the New Yorker tends to be over aggressive."

Who makes the ideal contestant?

"Oh, I'd say it would be a young man from Fort Worth, Tex., studying to be a doctor and married to a girl who was working to help him get his degree," said Goodson.

"It would help if the wife had just had a baby," laughed Todman. "The audience loves young fathers."

Irmas, Don't Be an 'Irma'

MARIE WILSON

. . . returns to air August 29

NEW YORK, (AP).—Radio and Marie Wilson may be responsible for a new common noun creeping into the English, or rather American language. The word is "Irma."

Girls who appear giddy, silly and who constantly put their feet (with shoes) into their mouths are being termed "Irmas."

Marie Wilson, lovely and shapely blonde, who stars in CBS's weekly comedy program, My Friend Irma, admits that the name may become as widely used as "malaprop"—from the character Mrs. Malaprop, created by the English dramatist, Sheridan, in the eighteenth century.

Marie's new Paramount picture, "My Friend Irma," based on her radio show, will certainly enhance the fame of Marie Wilson as well as the possibility of the word "Irma" becoming an everyday term.

Marie will resume her role as Irma when the episodes of "My Friend Irma" return to the air August 29, after an eight-week vacation.

Betty's Next Film To Be a Musical

Hollywood (AP).—Betty Grable is going to get out of those period costumes, at last.

Darryl Zanuck has promised Betty that her next film will be an up-to-date musical.

Miss Grable is now making "Wabash Avenue," another period piece set in Chicago during the Columbian Exposition of 1893.

Ready to Do Good Turn But Lacking Know-How

Hollywood (AP).—Director Delmer Daves tells this story, and if it isn't true he ought to get another D for dreaming (he swears it happened):

Locationing in Arizona with the "Warpaint" cast and crew, Daves assigned two Apaches to get or make some props he needed—food cooler, fire grate, water containers and pine-bough beds—for an Indian camp scene in the James Stewart picture.

Two hours late Daves went to see how the Indians were getting along. He found them huddled over a book. They explained that they had never used such things on the reservation, and were trying to learn how to make them.

The book they were studying? A copy of the Boy Scout manual.

VA Would Check Some GI Schools

By Rowland Evans, Jr.
Associated Press Newsfeature Writer

THE VETERANS ADMINISTRATION wants curbs on the enrollment of veterans in fly-by-night "proprietary" schools mushrooming in unemployment areas.

If this isn't done "taxpayers are going to be bled white," says H. V. Stirling, the man who runs the vast GI Bill Education program.

Stirling says 1400 new proprietary schools teaching everything from business administration to paper hanging have sprung up in the past year, concentrating in areas where veterans can't get jobs.

If this isn't checked, he says, one million veterans will be enrolled in these schools by next January.

Stirling has no quarrel with long-established proprietary schools or many of the newer ones. But he says the cost of sending one veteran through a one-year course at a fly-by-night school teaching house painting, for example, might cost $1020 in tuition and "consumable supplies" for which VA would pay. And after finishing that course, adds Stirling, the veteran might run over to another school to take wall-papering. This is known as "course-hopping."

In many cases the reasons he would take these courses, says Stirling, are:

1. That he is out of work.
2. That he is solicited by the school to learn a trade which he probably never will pursue and at the same time pick up a monthly subsistence check from the Government of from $75 to $120.

One Step Taken

THE VA is limited on what it can do to prevent this. It is contemplating two steps. It already has taken one.

Last summer it demanded cost analyses from all new proprietary schools (those started since passage of the GI Bill in June, 1944) to support their charges to students, which VA must pay. The GI Bill says that schools may make "customary charges." Schools started after June, 1944, had no customary charges.

At the same time VA demanded cost analyses from old proprietary schools whose charges have gone up more than 25 per cent since June, 1944. It did not demand this of nonprofit schools, such as Harvard or the University of Chicago. Nonprofit schools have raised their tuitions an average of 33 per cent.

Proprietary schools say the cost analysis program is "manifestly unfair to the entire private school movement." They say it presents them with a tremendous accounting problem which they are not equipped to handle. The VA claims it is absolutely necessary if fly-by-night schools are to be kept under control.

At least two proprietary schools have gone to court to enjoin the VA from demanding these cost-analyses. If successful, these schools and many others will collect "millions and millions" of dollars in back tuition, says Stirling.

The two steps which VA may take are:

1. Refusing to sign contracts with newly established proprietary schools which want to charge more than VA thinks just. Theoretically VA could prohibit any veteran from going to any new proprietary school by this means.
2. Demanding complete justification from each veteran that the course he wants to take is necessary to his "readjustment." Since the original intent of the GI Bill was to "readjust" veterans to civilian life, VA could probably put a stop through this means to hundreds of thousands of courses now being taken.

Congress Has Not Acted

THE AGENCY has asked Congress for $8,600,000 to put this program into operation. So far, it has not been voted the money.

Under the GI Bill VA has nothing at all to say about approving a school which wants to give GI training. That is done by the individual States.

Proprietary schools are eager for passage of a bill now in the Senate which would give States the right to hear any complaint VA has about a school because of its high tuition. The State could discipline the school if it agreed with VA's complaint. Proprietary schools say this bill would eliminate all abuses.

Stirling opposes the bill. He says States should not have the right to set tuition rates which the Federal Government must pay. Senator Pepper (D., Fla.), chairman of the Senate subcommittee examining the bill, also believes the Federal Government should have some grip on the tuition purse-string.

Stirling favors another bill in the Senate which would give VA a statutory right to demand the cost analyses proprietary schools don't want to give. Proprietary school operators say this bill would give VA "very tight control over the educational policies of all private schools."

In Stirling's view, the need for future education under the GI Bill should be confined to three groups of veterans:

1. Those who for legitimate reasons postponed their educational rights. Hardship at home could be a reason.
2. Veterans now enrolled in long-term courses such as medicine or law.
3. Veterans who enlisted under the Armed Forces Voluntary Recruitment Act (about one million) between October, 1945, and October, 1946. They are entitled to all GI Bill benefits and are just now being discharged.

Stirling says that if efforts aren't made to stop booming enrollments in proprietary schools the GI Bill might be used as a relief measure until all veterans use up all their education entitlement (four years is the maximum) or until the program expires in July, 1957.

Last year, he points out, enrollment in these schools went up 115,000, while college-level enrollments were down by 88,000.

Dr. Connery Named

Duke University has named Dr. Robert Howe Connery as professor of public administration. Now a member of the political science department at the University of Illinois, Dr. Connery has recently been a consulant to the Task Force on National Security Organization and to the Hoover Commission on Organization of the Executive Branch of the Federal Government. He will begin his duties at Duke in the fall.

Heads Student Affairs

Case Institute of Technology, Cleveland, has appointed Dean S. Newhouse, director of student affairs at the University of Washington, Seattle, as its first dean of students. Newhouse, who assumed his new position recently, is vice president and member of the executive board of the National Association of Deans and Advisers of Men.

Shown at Lake Tahoe, at the Cal-Neva Lodge, are singer Rudy Vallee and Eleanor Kathleen Norris, 21-year-old University of California graduate, whose engagement was recently announced. Vallee has been appearing at the resort

The Rhumba Rummy Aristocrat

Comes Canasta, From South of the Border

By Saul Pett

NEW YORK (AP).—There are 40 different classes of rummy card games and most of the players are class conscious.

Although they are all playing various forms of the same game, Oklahoma rummy fans look down at Oklahoma gin fans who look down at Hollywood gin fans who look down at straight gin fans who look down at folks who still play knock or just plain rummy as dull, timid and old hat.

Devotees of Pif-Paf rummy, whatever that is, can't understand why anybody likes Freeze Out, whatever that is. And the same little islands of isolation exist among the followers of other rummy forms—Zioncheck, Panguingue, Michigan, Java, Persian, Five Hundred, Boathouse, Cedarhurst, Round the Corner and Liverpool, to name a few of them.

But now comes Canasta, the rumba rummy from Latin America. The people who play this insist they have found not only the latest but also the most daring, most intelligent, most strategic, most anything of any rummy game yet. Canasta fans look down at all the players of the 39 other rummies as downright reactionary.

Mrs. Josefina Artayeta de Viel of Buenos Aires, author of the book, "Canasta" (Pelligrini and Cudahy), says "wild" is too mild a term for the game. She says:

"Canasta embodies the principles of building card combinations as in gin, the melding of pinochle, the partnership understanding of bridge and deception of poker, plus the offense, defense and cunning of competitive sports. If you love your neighbor, don't play Canasta with him."

The game began in Uruguay and worked westward to Argentina and then north to the United States. Ralph Michaels, a Chicago businessman, is believed to have been the first to bring the game into this country.

Canasta (the name means basket in Spanish), however, is still a long way from sweeping this nation. It only began to catch on this year. According to the Association of American Playing Card Manufacturers, the most popular card games in this country still are, in this order:

Contract bridge, pinochle, poker, rummy (all forms), solitaire and hearts.

In the fourth place slot, however, Canasta is reported threatening gin for top place among all 40 forms of rummy.

Canasta seems to have captured much of the Long Island and cafe society set in New York, the swimming pool set in Hollywood, the embassy tea set in Washington and the "horsey" set of nearby Virginia estates.

Its New York-Washington-Virginia devotees include the Dwight D. Eisenhowers, the Walter Chryslers and Mrs. George Mesta, United States Minister to Luxemburg.

Its Hollywood fans include Kirk Douglas, Angela Lansbury and Lucille Ball, who calls the game "gin rummy's smarter brother."

In both Hollywood and New York, Canasta has been taught by television and in department stores.

"It's still kind of in the sophisticated group," admits a spokesman for the card association. "It hasn't spread yet to the masses. In most taverns for example, where lots of factory workers play cards, the most popular game still is pinochle. Canasta, so far, is cafe society."

Read the Rules

BEFORE you play Canasta, you'd better read all the rules, which require more room than this space allows. But for a brief insight into the game there is the Canasta book by Mrs. Ottilie H. Reilly (Ives Washburn, Inc.). She says:

"Two standard decks of 52 cards are used and 4 jokers. Deuces and jokers are wild. There are no sequences. The object of the game is to form melds of seven cards of a kind . . . a Canasta.

"There is vulnerability, as in bridge, and the call as in poker. There are two different degrees of vulnerability—the first appears as soon as you reach 1500 points, when, instead of 50 points, you need 90 points to make the first meld, and the second one, when reaching 3000 points, you need 120 points to meld.

"The treys play an important part in the game. The red treys carry an extra bonus of 100 points each and 800 if all four happen to be on one side, but these points also can count against you if you are unlucky enough not to get a chance to make a meld.

'The black treys are defensive cards used as stop cards for discards, making it impossible for the following player to take the discard pile. Wild cards are also used to stop cards during the play and when one of them is played on the discard pile, the latter becomes 'frozen.'

"This means that it is impossible for a player to take the discard pile unless he has a natural pair matching the following upcard or whatever upcard is before him when it is his turn to play. The upcard of the frozen discard pile may not be used to add to melds on the table."

Think this is confusing? Wait until they laugh when you sit down to play.

Columbia to Offer Training In Techniques of Television

Study of television techniques will be incorporated in 25 professional training courses to be offered during the 1949-50 academic year by Columbia University School of General Studies in cooperation with the the National Broadcasting Company, Sterling W. Fisher, manager of the network's public affairs and Education Department has announced.

The teaching staff will be recruited largely from NBC network personnel, Fisher said, with the majority of courses to be given under working conditions in the NBC studios in Radio City, New York. Fourteen network executives are listed as instructors.

The curriculum has been designed to give fullest possible coverage of radio and TV, Fisher said. There will be courses in basic radio and TV, dramatic writing, news writing, promotion, publicity, news commentary, speech, announcing, acting, use of equipment, sound effects, audience research, international relations, production and direction, music and the documentary.

NBC staff members who will give courses are James Nelson, director of advertising and promotion; Hugh M. Beville, director of research; Patrick J. Kelly, head of the announcing staff; Frederick G. Knopfke, manager of the sound effects division; Sydney H. Eiges, vice president in charge of press; Adolph Schneider, director of television news and special events; Fred B. Bate, night executive officer.

Others will include Ferdinand A. Wankel, assistant director of television engineering operations; Wade Arnold, head of the special programs staff; James Harvey of the special programs staff, Frank Papp and Edward King, producer-directors; Doris Corwith, director of talks and religious broadcasts, and Fisher.

Howard Tuition Fees Raised

FOLLOWING the trend in most American universities and colleges, Howard University has found it necessary to increase tuition fees in its several schools and colleges, it is announced by Dr. James M. Nabrit, jr., secretary of the university.

The increases, which go into effect on September 1, are as follows:

Graduate School: from $141 to $171, or $30 per year; School of Social Work: $150 to $171, or $21; College of Liberal Arts: $141 to $171, or $30; School of Engineering and Architecture: $141 to $171, or $30; College of Pharmacy: $150 to $171, or $21; School of Law: $150 to $171, or $21; School of Music: $180 to $204, or $24; College of Dentistry: $225 to $260, or $35; and College of Medicine: $315 to $360 or $45.

These increased fees cover tuition charges for the regular school period of approximately nine and one-half months.

Dr. Nabrit also said registration of the School of Law will be held on September 13, and for new students in all other schools and colleges on September 30, except for the College of Medicine, which will hold its registration on September 27.

"Registration of all Dental students will be held on September 29," Dr. Nabrit said. "These new dates will extend the academic year approximately one week longer than usual."

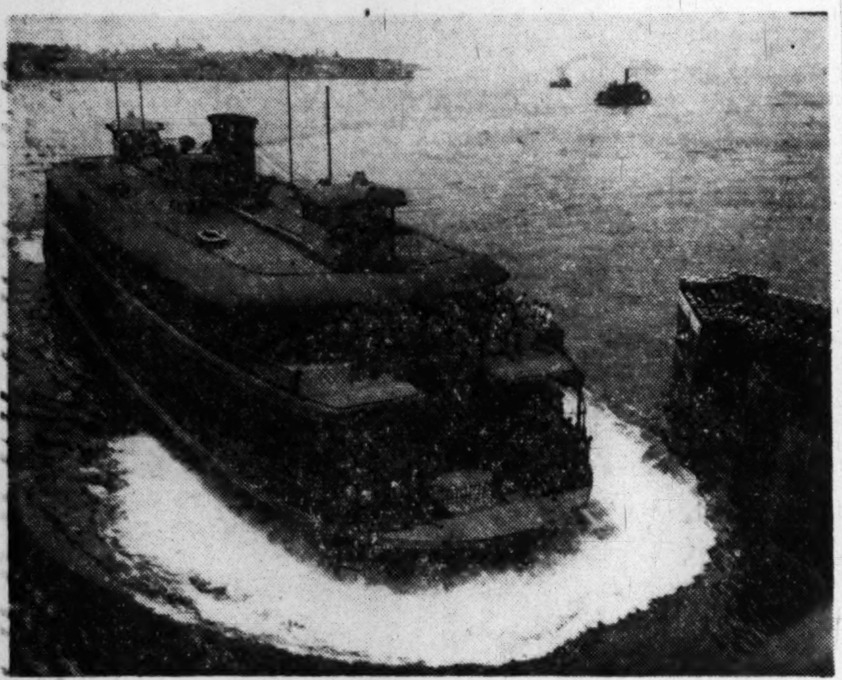
It's Ferries of Birth and Death That Plow New York Harbor



MISS NEW YORK ENTERS HER SLIP AT SOUTH FERRY
. . . the ride is a big bargain for people studying people

By Saul Pett

NEW YORK (AP).—People ride the Staten Island ferry for many reasons.

They come aboard to get to the other side, to take a ride, to see the Statue of Liberty and New York skyline, to cool off, to make love, to die.

All for a nickel.

It's called the biggest bargain in water travel anywhere. For five cents, which won't buy a candy bar in most places, you can still ride five miles from lower Manhattan to Staten Island. No extra charge for the salt spray, the sea breeze, the sights of the world's busiest harbor. It's even a bigger bargain for people studying people. You never run out of raw material.

44 Years' Experience

"PEOPLE die, babies are born, we see everything," says Arthur Hinchey, supervising captain of the ferries. He's been making the run since 1905, when the city took over the ferries from a railroad.

Suicides are an old story to ferry crews. Estimates of the yearly rate for all six boats go up to 50. Each pilot house has a special suicide bell to sound an alarm.

Two years ago, a man sat on the passenger deck getting a shoeshine. He paid off, said "so long" to a woman on his right and jumped over the side. The crew saved him but were almost tempted to toss him back after they offered him a slug of whisky. He studied the bottle label very carefully. He explained he was "damn particular" about what he drank.

People have shot themselves on ferries. Captain Hinchey has never been able to understand why they take a boat for this form of suicide.

Several times pregnant women hurrying to a hospital have been wrong in their timing. One cold winter morning, about 2 o'clock, a woman began giving birth in the ladies' cabin.

Obstetrical Interlude

HER husband was along but, of course, he was useless. She was assisted by the mate—at the moment the best expert aboard since he was the father of eleven children. Keeping the baby warm was a problem. There were no blankets aboard. So the mate smeared the baby with machine oil and wrapped it in waste rags normally used to wipe engines. Both mother and child did well.

Most of the regular commuters are taxpayers. That, of course, makes them critics on navigation and seamanship.

If the ferry berths are bumped too hard, if the trip takes much over its normal 25 minutes, dirty looks and wisecracks will be thrown up at the man in the pilot house. But the passengers are appreciative, too.

Captain Hinchey remembers one run that took one hour and 10 minutes—a tortuous journey in which he felt his way through dense fog, between freighters and tugs, strained for the sound of bells. Going over, several passengers let the captain know he was doing a lousy job.

Flowers for Skipper

BUT when the ferry finally docked safely a loud cheer went up. People waved their congratulations up to the captain. One man tossed a bouquet of flowers into the pilot house.

One regular commuter irritates Capt. Harry Parker.

"This guy," says the captain, "always looks at his watch when we dock. He always looks up at me shaking his head. Never says anything. He's been getting my goat for years."

The things people forget on ferries are endless. Not just purses, rubbers, groceries, books, coats. A man once forgot a horse aboard. Sometimes children are forgotten. And several times this has happened:

A man drives his car onto the ferry, the boat gets under way and he goes into the smoking cabin. The ferry docks, he follows the mob, rushes off the pier, races into a subway, rides several stations before remembering he forgot his car.

Alarming Narrative

ONCE during the war, the mate rushed up to the pilot house and reported, "Captain, there's a woman below who says she's going to throw her husband overboard."

"She nuts?" asked the skipper.

"No, she seems all right. But she's French and all I can make out is she wants to throw her husband overboard."

Captain Sweeting went down to investigate. He talked to the woman and all he could understand was what the mate understood. Having little time for such things, he was about to suggest she walk him off a bridge when the woman produced a small article.

It was an urn. Further questioning revealed that the urn contained her husband's ashes. Before he died, her French husband had expressed such fondness for American democracy he asked that his ashes be thrown off the side of a Staten Island ferry as it passed the Statue of Liberty.

The request was granted. The urn was dropped into the water near the statue. And although the woman was weeping, her act was little noticed by the passengers nearby.

A Single Road Cuts Carolina Island Chain

By Dave Roberts

NAG'S HEAD, N. C.—Directly south from Virginia Beach extends a fantastic, desolate wilderness of sand and water. Cutting the open sea from its inner sounds is a strip of narrow islands reaching for more than 125 miles. Along those outer banks are scattered a few isolated villages, most of them as remote from "the main" as they were 200 years ago.

Only at a single point do mainland influences touch the banks. U. S. Highway 158, deserting the protection of the back country, skips lightly across the south neck of Currituck Sound at Pt. Harbor, whisks past Kill Devil Hill and Kitty Hawk, scene of the Wright brothers' first successful airplane flight, and comes to rest on historic Roanoke Island at the village of Manteo. Thus of the 125 miles of sandy islands, less than 20 are served by any sort of all-weather, all-season highway.

But this has been enough to show folks here that this wild and interesting country has a definite—and lucrative—attraction for vacationists. Where the highway touches the beach, a considerable group of hotels and cottages has sprung up. "Summer people," as visitors are known, flock to the district from early April until late December. They come to swim, to lie in the sunshine, to visit historic shrines, to talk with friendly, hospitable Carolina folks. They come to gun for ducks and geese, to fish for channel bass and stripers, to hunt the deer and bear that roam the great swamp woods.

Plans now are under way for construction of an "ocean highway" from Virginia Beach half way down the outer banks to Manteo. There the proposed road will cross Croatan Sound and continue south through New Holland and Belhaven to Washington, N. C., where it will join US 17, one of the popular thoroughfares to Florida. The project calls for the building of approximately 60 miles of island highway from Virginia Beach to Nag's Head. Toll will be charged against all motorists using the route. It is hoped that it will be open within a year.

Sands and Waters Merge

THE first adventurers who head their cars southward over this way, will find they are passing a district where land and sea hardly are divisible. To the left rise the huge rollers of the Atlantic, pounding relentlessly—as they have for ages—against tough little spits of ocean sand. To the right lie the gentler waters of the sounds, where geese and ducks assemble by millions when autumn comes. Only two tiny hamlets are found along the route, one called Corolla, the other Duck. Both are fishing settlements, whose people for generations have been as much of the sea as of the land.

A magnificent variety of bird life will greet the traveler. If he comes in autumn or winter he'll have opportunity to see waterfowl the like of which he's never beheld before. Geese, brant, ducks and great white swan will rise from bays and inlets in quacking profusion as his car speeds along. Shore birds will be everywhere. Great bald eagles now frequent the banks—and sometimes make nuisances of themselves. The Coast Guard boys tell of how one pair of eagles insisted on building their nest across telephone wires leading to one of the stations. An "eagle patrol" did constant duty for weeks keeping the wires free.

At places the islands are so narrow that a strong man could throw a stone from sea to sound. But in others they widen into magnificent forests of water oak, tulip poplar, bay, holly and dogwood. Some truly spectacular sand dunes stand, as tawny ghosts, against the horizon, creeping constantly under the pressures of winter winds. The largest of these is Whalehead Barchane, which is said to move as much as 20 feet a year. He lifts his head 100 feet or more above the flat sands about him. By comparison with the rest of the coastal plain, this is an imposing eminence!

This surfside boulevard will head the traveler into a land chock full of history and romance. He'll pass Kill Devil Hill, where the Federal Government maintains a simple but commanding monument high on the right of a large sand dune. It was on this hill that the Wright boys, Orville and Wilbur, worked for months to ready themselves and their fragile airplane for the first heavier-than-air flight on American soil. The hill has shifted during the years, I'm told—standing now 200 feet or more from its earlier position. Protected today by a blanket of grasses and shrubs it is held quiet—or at least that's the Government's hope.

Beyond Nag's Head the jaunter comes to Roanoke Island, which carries you to the past—back to one of the earliest English settlements on the Western Hemisphere.

In 1584 Sir Walter Raleigh sent one Philip Amadas to the New World to select a site for a permanent colony. Amadas explored the island named Roanoke — a friendly bit of land which blocks the way between Albemarle Sound on the north and Pamlico Sound on the south. A year later an expedition under the command of Sir Richard Grenville stopped at the island to attempt the first permanent settlement. Its members stayed for some months—but left early the next year with the fleet of Sir Francis Drake, who went to sack the Spanish town of St. Augustine, farther to the south.

In 1586 Grenville left a force of 15 men on Roanoke Island to repair and hold "Fort Raleigh," built by the earlier expedition. But when colonists headed by Gov. John White arrived at the bastion in 1587, no trace of the holding force could be found. White's group, which included 91 men, 17 women and 9 children was destined to live in history as The Lost Colony.

Governor White, who went back to England for supplies, returned in 1590 to find the houses of the little town destroyed. The people—including the governor's daughter and granddaughter—had vanished. The word "Croatoan" carved on a tree led White to the belief that the English had attempted to move to a nearby district inhabited by friendly Indians. But no trace of any member of the original band ever was discovered.

The 362nd anniversary of the Lost Colony this summer is being observed at the Waterside Theater at Manteo, the modern "metropolis" of Roanoke Island. The Roanoke Island Historical Association, with the cooperation of the States of North Carolina and the National Park Service are presenting "The Lost Colony," by Paul Green. The pageant will be staged Wednesday through Sunday nights until September 4. The Department of Conservation and Development, Raleigh, N. C., has free pamphlets, maps and other literature on this interesting Southern State.

New Brunswick Hunting

For the protection of visiting sportsmen in New Brunswick every non-resident hunter must be accompanied by a licensed guide while hunting big game. The law states, however, that one guide may accompany two residents when hunting birds.

They'll Give Tons Of Grapes Away

Tons of free grapes will be given Southern California vacationers attending the Escondido Grape Days celebration, to be held September 9 to 11. Escondido ("Hidden") lies in a fragrant valley a half-hour drive from the Pacific.

Escondido is also famed for the surrounding orange and avocado groves, which flourish in the dry subtropical climate. Mile upon mile of the fruit laden trees line highways to the town. During the Grape Days Festival, both visitors and residents will wear Western costumes.

Among points of interest near Escondido are Spanish Mission San Luis Rey, an outpost founded in 1798 to serve the Indians, and Palomar Observatory, which houses the world's most powerful telescope and its 200-inch mirror.

D. C. Masters Going To Asheville Games

By Lieut. Col. Henry A. Walker

SEVERAL of Washington's Life Masters and Senior Master bridge players, who are playing in the two-session team-of-four contest today at the Piedmont Championships at Natural Bridge, Va., are making plans to spend next weekend at Asheville, N. C., competing in the Southern Appalachian games.

Schedule at Asheville calls for a special pair game Thursday evening, men's and women's pair events Friday afternoon, a mixed pair contest Friday night, two-session open pair contest Saturday and two-session team-of-four on Sunday.

A record turnout is expected at the Alexandria tournament at the George Mason Hotel Labor Day weekend. Men's and women's pairs will be competing Friday night, with a two-session mixed event on Saturday, a two-session open pair game on Sunday and a team-of-four contest on Monday.

An outstanding change in the rating scale for ranking bridge players was voted by the American Contract Bridge League at its recent executive meeting in Chicago. In the future, the following categories will be in effect: no master points—Junior; 1 to 19 master points—Junior Master; 20 to 49—Master; 50 to 99—National Master; 100 to 199—Senior Master; 200 to 299—Junior Life Master; 300 or over with 30 National Master Points—Life Master. After the Summer National Tournament of 1950, 50 National Master Points will be required for qualification for Life Master.

Master Point Games

ONLY two master point games are scheduled for the coming week. On Thursday at the Chess Club in the Gordon Hotel, members and guest card holders will vie for national honors. On Saturday afternoon, the Women's Auxiliary of the Washington Bridge League will hold an open master point game at the Euclid Studios, 1355 Euclid st. nw.; Mrs. D. E. Stephan directing.

First session of the previously announced two-session mixed pair club championship of the F. Arthur Walker Duplicate Club goes into play at 7:30 tonight at the club studios, 1511 N. Quincy st., Arlington, Va. Reservations, limited to regular club players, must be made in advance with the director at GLebe 3347. Trophies and double master points will be awarded to the championship winners.

The Chess Club has announced its Annual Two-Session Individual Club Championship, to take place on the third and fourth Tuesdays in September. Members and guest card holders are requested to register for the event with Arthur Lane, secretary, at their earliest convenienc.

Rating Point Games

RATING point games during the coming week will be held as follows: Monday, at the Federal Bridge League and the LaSalle Studios; Tuesday, at the Count Club, the Agricultural Club at the Euclid Studios and at the Riverside Club in Arlington; Wednesday, at the Washington Bridge League; Friday, at the Euclid Studios and Arlington Farms; Saturday, at the Chess Club.

Rainier's Ice Rivers May Prove Her Death

By E. Q. Anderson
(Associated Press Newsfeatures)

Mount Rainier National Park, Wash.—How old is a mountain? How long will it live?

Let's take Mount Rainier National Park, which is celebrating its golden anniversary this year. But, of course, Mount Rainier itself is somewhat older.

The geologists, who have to work in big figures because the record left by man himself is so recent, say the mountain may be 300,000 years old.

And—barring climatic changes or eruptions—it may still be a landmark half a million years from now.

Incidentally, don't think eruptions are not impossible. Four times in the past century smoke was sighted coming from the mountain. And there are a number of caves at the summit from which steam issues.

Mount Rainier rises 14,408 feet above sea level. When you consider that it is only 100 miles or so from the sea, you can visualize why it is an impressive landmark in the Puget Sound country.

Here is a great cone of rock, slashed by 26 rivers of ice—glaciers. The timber line ends at half its height, above which are only knife edges of reddish rock, alternated by white snow and blue-white ice.

Rainier carries upon itself the seeds of its own destruction. These are the glaciers—the heavy, cutting fingers of ice that move grindingly down its sides. Park naturalists estimate these glaciers carry away 25,000 tons of ground-up mountain every day.

But the glaciers are decreasing in size, which means they are losing their destructive powers. For example, the Nisqually glacier, which in ages past probably extended into Puget Sound, shrinks 70 feet a year.

Europe's Coffee's Bad And Here's the Reason

By Bob Thomas

HOLLYWOOD (AP).—What's wrong with the coffee in Europe?

For decades coffee-loving United States tourists have wondered this. So did Joseph Bulasky, who operate's Coffee Dan's, where many of Hollywood's film and radio famous quaff their Java. He has returned from a tour of Europe, where he studied Continental coffee habits.

"Coffee, the universally loved beverage of Americans, is taken lightly by Europeans," he deposed.

"It is drunk black and very strong. Europeans like it that way because they drink coffee as a stimulant. Americans find European coffee bitter unless they add a lot of cream and sugar.

"Americans gulp coffee like water. Not so Europeans. They serve it demi-tasse and sip it slowly.

"European coffee is steamed instead of brewed, which accounts for its strong flavor. The coffee urns in restaurants look like refineries with their intricate networks of pipes. You can't order a cup and expect to get it immediately. It has to be steamed individually."

American coffee habits weren't left behind after the Army's invasion of England, Bulasky reported.

"You would be viewed with alarm if you ordered a cup of coffee in mid-afternoon," he said. "To the Britons, that is tea time. And they scorn the use of American tea bags. They pour hot water right over the leaves."

The five-cent mug of Java, which seems to be making a comeback in the United States, doesn't exist in Europe. "It's hard to find a 10-cent one," Bulasky said. "Prices are usually 12 to 20 cents."

Working people "take 10" in Europe, just as you and I. But they usually down wine or tea, not coffee.

Bulasky found the best coffee in Switzerland, the worst in Italy. He has a suggestion for coffee-lovers who are going to Europe: Take a jar of instant coffee along.

SAULT STE. MARIE, Ontario (AP).—The Sault Chamber of Commerce will blacklist Algoma resort operators and business establishments found guilty of unfair tourist dealings, it is announced by President R. L. Curran.

He said the chamber was determined to wipe out any black mark against the Sault district through the alleged blacklisting of the area by the Chicago Automobile Club. The Illinois organization claimed that a number of complaints had been made by United States tourists about high prices, noisy streets and poor fishing.

"There are some grounds for the Chicago club's move against this district. It's up to us to see that this doesn't happen again," Curran said.

The chamber adopted a resolution to blacklist resorts and stores giving unfair treatment to tourists.

Old National Pike Was Pioneers' Path

By Alexander R. George
Associated Press Newsfeatures Writer

UNITED STATES Highway 40 traces a pioneers' path from the Atlantic Coast to the Golden Gate at San Francisco.

The modern motor road follows quite closely the route of the old National Pike to the Middle West. The pike, extending at first from Cumberland, Md., across the Appalachian Mountains to Wheeling, then in Virginia, was one of the most important roads to the West before the railroads came.

Congress authorized improvement of the pike in 1806, and the Federal Government expended seven million dollars by 1838, when work was discontinued. The pike was extended westward through the State capitals of Ohio and Indiana to Vandalia, then the capital of Illinois.

There was prolonged controversy as to whether the pike should cross the Mississippi River at St. Louis or at Alton, Ill. The arrival of the steam railway at the Mississippi concluded the argument in favor of St. Louis.

Over the National Pike rolled great caravans of Conestoga wagons. The Conestoga was a big wagon, often painted blue and red, which with the dull white cloth covering gave it a patriotic tinge.

The wheel rims of the Conestoga wagon were broad for travel in soft soil and on the prairies. It was named after the town in Pennsylvania near Lancaster where it was manufactured.

Drivers of the Conestoga wagon wanted a cheap cigar, which would be easy to light in the wind, so a Pennsylvania tobacconist produced a long thin cigar which drivers carried in the tops of their boots, These were known as "conestogas" or "stogas," later called Pittsburgh "stogies."

The National Pike was maintained by turnpike companies and financed by road tolls. It and the Pennsylvania Road, running from Philadelphia to Pittsburgh, did a big freight business until the railroads were established.

At Indianapolis the National Pike was intersected by the Michigan Road, which was much traveled by pioneers going north from Kentucky. Many westbound homeseekers traveled the pike as far as Wheeling, then took boats down the Ohio River.

About 15 miles west of St. Louis on United States Highway 40 is Boonville, Mo., named after the redoubtable traveler, Daniel Boone. Over this section of the road, Boone and his two sons transported supplies of salt to the little French village of St. Louis in 1800.

Beyond Boonville, near Kansas City, is Independence, home town of President Truman, where wagon trains started for the wild west over the Santa Fe and the Oregon trails.

Ski Lift Operating For View Seekers

Jackson, N. H.—The chair lift at Thorn Mountain Ski Area in this mountain vacation town is operating this summer from 9:30 a. m. to 5 p. m. The 4000-foot lift is divided in two sections, and viewseekers may ride to the Halfway House, or to the summit of Thorn Mountain, which looks across to the Presidential Range and other peaks.

A special feature will be a genuine, full-course Rhode Island clambake at the Halfway House each Saturday afternoon, with food served at 4 p. m. Picnic tables, hiking trails, and other facilities are available.

September Swimming

Atlantic City, N. J.—September is one of the best months of the year for surf bathing here. Temperature of the ocean remains in the high 70's, same as in July and August.

Subtropic Beauty Abounds In Florida's Chain of Parks

FLORIDA'S network of State parks provides the vacationist with a choice of tropical vistas, primitive charm and historical lore. Eight parks form a composite picture of the Nation's southernmost State.

The largest in Florida's system is the Myakka River State Park, 70 miles southeast of Tampa. In addition to many miles of the Myakka River, the park includes two lakes. This area is considered one of the outstanding wild life sanctuaries in the eastern United States and is a haven for tremendous flocks of wading birds and other fowl, many rare ones. Some of the unusual birds are sand bill cranes, wood ibis, white ibis and mallard.

Highlands Hammock State Park, near Sebring in south-central Florida, has been described as one of the three outstanding natural parks in the Nation. Here, lush plant growth and native wildlife have been made conveniently accessible to the public. The hammock is a natural jungle with trees 100 feet high and trunks as large as 31 feet in circumference. It also is an ideal bird sanctuary where more than 100 varieties make their home.

Orchids and Palms

COLORFUL water plants, shy orchids and graceful palms dominate the tropical water course that lends its name to the Hillsborough River State Park, about 20 miles northeast of Tampa.

Gold Head Branch State Park, about 50 miles south of Jacksonville near Keystone Heights, takes its name from a spring-fed stream which meanders along a beautiful ravine. The park includes several lakes called "Sink Hole Lakes" fed by lake bottom springs.

North of Jacksonville, Fort Clinch State Park overlooks Cumberland Sound from Amelia Island. Fort Clinch, named for a Federal officer in the Seminole War, is one of the State's outstanding historic spots.

In northwest Florida there are two parks. Florida Caverns State Park, near Marianna, provides well-lighted trails through Florida's network of underground passageways and limestone escarpments. The vegetation, soil character, underground river, a natural bridge, springs, dense forests and the beautiful assortment of plant life combine to make this park outstanding.

North and South Meet

TORREYA STATE PARK is situated in "The Appalachians of Florida," on the high east banks of the Apalachicola River near Bristol. The natural meeting ground of northern and southern trees, it boasts the Florida Torreya and the Florida Yew—found nowhere else in the world. Confederate gun emplacements remain within the park grounds and the park also is rich in Indian history.

Gym Teachers Take Up Modern Dancing

Discovering these dancers at Camp Sargent, Peterboro, N.H., cameraman Allan Gould, himself no dancer, designed a dance that he thought would give him a fine "above the clouds" effect.

Some 270 freshman and sophomore students of Sargent, women's college of physical education at Boston University, enjoy summer weeks at the camp.

The girls: drummer Jean C. Comstock, 18, of Kingston, N.Y., and spritely Marianne V. Patterson, also 18, from Landsdowne, Pa., are future gym teachers.

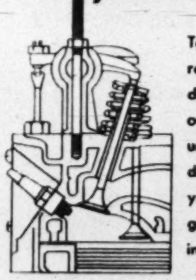
37 years ahead of the times!



Today more and more manufacturers are recognizing what Chevrolet saw almost four decades ago—that valve-in-head engines offer advantages in efficiency and economy unmatched by any other automobile engine design. And in 1949—as for the past 37 years—only Chevrolet in the low price field gives you the proved advantages of a valve-in-head six!

ahead* ON GAS! Faster intake of fuel mixture . . . less resistance during exhaust strokes . . . controlled combustion in Chevrolet's valve-in-head engine mean more work per gallon of gas—greater fuel savings.

ahead* ON OIL! A specialized 4-way lubrication system assures constant lubrication . . . at the right rate for every engine speed . . . under all conditions . . . without any waste. Just ask any Chevrolet owner!

ahead* ON DEPENDABILITY! Cam-ground cast-alloy pistons maintain close fit for extra-long service. Every cylinder is completely surrounded by water to warm up evenly . . . prevent warping.

ahead* ON SERVICING! Chevrolet's sturdy valve-in-head engine seldom needs attention. When service is necessary, its practical design lends itself to accessibility . . . saves time, work, money.

Valve-in-Head is far ahead on land, on sea, and in the air!

CHEVROLET You don't have to pay a premium for smooth, functional big-car styling that stays beautifully modern. . . . Chevrolet has it. . . , You don't have to be satisfied with anything short of the safety, comfort, and luxury appointments of a Unisteel Body by Fisher. . . . Chevrolet has it. . . . There's no need to take less than the economy and power of a valve-in-head engine . . . the safer vision of a wide, curved windshield . . . the roominess of five-foot, mid-car seats. . . . WALTER GROPIUS: A thought before going to bed . . .

WALTER GROPIUS, one of the pioneers of modern architecture, can't remember when he first began to feel that he was making progress in his chosen career. But he can remember what an old family friend said to him in Berlin 50 years ago.

"My boy," he told Gropius, "everything you do depends on how hard you concentrate on your goal. Every night before you go to bed, ask yourself if you did anything that day which would bring you closer to what you want in life."

What 18-year-old Walter Gropius wanted most, he decided, was to be an architect. So with his friend's advice in mind, he took the first direct step. He began studying architecture at a university in Berlin.

Two years later, still remembering the advice of his friend, he did an unheard-of thing. He quit. His father, himself a state architect, stormed and pleaded. No respectable German student, he reminded his son, would dare disgrace himself and his family by resigning from the Berlin university!

Walter's answer was to apprentice himself to a firm of architects in Berlin. He had decided that, by actual professional work, he could do more each day to further his career. Within five years he had set up his own practice in Berlin.

HE FOUNDED THE BAUHAUS

Gropius became internationally famous by founding the unique Bauhaus (Building House), where he devoted himself to the architecture of the future. Designing everything from teapots to locomotives, he preached his gospel: architecture must be simple, useful and beautiful.

When Hitler, in 1933, branded the Bauhaus "oriental" and destroyed it, Gropius exiled himself. In 1937, he came to Harvard as Professor of Architecture.

Professor Gropius, experts say, revolutionized architecture. But while his achievements are spectacular, the formula for them is not. As he learned when he was 18, it is a matter of "sweating it out."

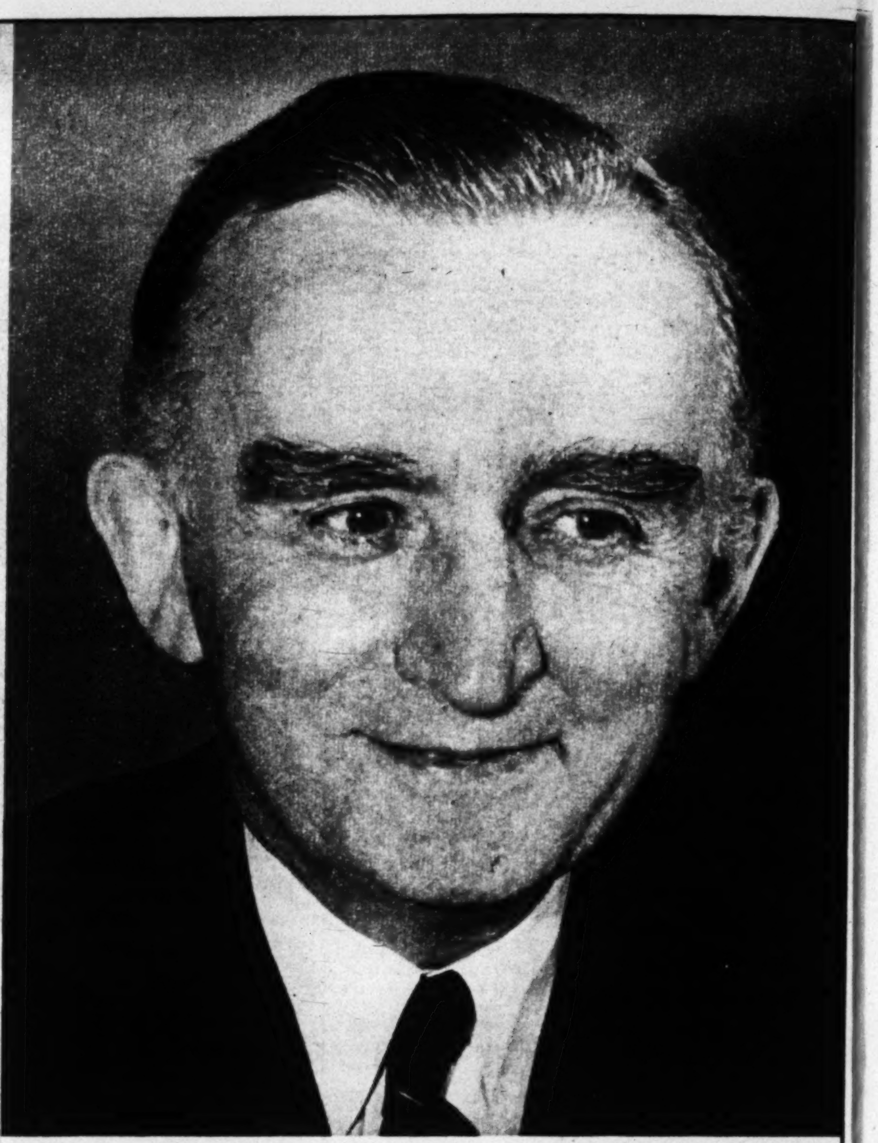
WHAT'S AROUND THE CORNER?

The answer depends in part on our own thinking, but logic points to plentiful jobs and good business

By Robert C. Albright



Business conditions, says Sen. O'Mahoney, are far from being black.

Everyone knew a recession had to follow inflation;

WHAT'S AROUND THAT CORNER? Neither boom nor bust, say the Washington experts.

There can be plenty of jobs and happier times all around if government, industry and labor keep their chins up. What's needed is actually more planning for, and talking about, good times to come.

Unemployment, that old bogey of the 'thirties, is back with us four million strong, but you needn't get panicky. By all pre-war standards, employment still is booming. Only one pirouetting year since the war, incredibly inflated 1948, which smashed every record in the economic books, kept more people at work. It may be small comfort to those seeking jobs, but today's unemployment would have seemed dizzy prosperity in the really distressing thirties.

Gobledegook Washington is still looking for a name for what's happening. Some call it "disinflation" and others the "rich recession."

President Truman says there's one thing sure and certain—it isn't a depression.

The men fighting whatever it is, with all of the intensity of another cold war, have these words of reassurance:

What's happening, they insist, is that long-delayed readjustment from a war economy. Production has caught up with war-starved demands for most goods. People have the money to buy and will buy if the price is right but have stopped reaching for the moon.

Consumers for the first time are cagily following the "sound" principles of businessmen themselves —keeping inventories low and buying mainly what they need.

SHEER LOGIC IS FAVORABLE

Washington recently had a taste of what could happen on a national scale to help turn that corner. A wave of clothing sales turned July into a boom month locally. Prices were "right" for both buyer and seller. Pleased as punch, local merchants and consumers are still talking about it.

From the standpoint of sheer logic, all of the so-called "favorable" factors augur against a bust. Abundant savings, unspent government billions that will further raise purchasing power, and "built in" safeguards for the insecure and jobless, should prevent any depression you can dream up—but don't dream.

Aside from getting quick relief to the recent "pools" on unemployment, the only thing giving Washington economists real concern is that well-known fifth dimension—public psychology. Can a country talk itself or be talked into a depression? If so, they say, we will have been gold-bricked by the chief disciple of another great American slump, Joe Stalin.

Perhaps the leading Washington prophet of a continued high level of prosperity for several years to come is Senator Joseph C. O'Mahoney (D. Wyo.), Chairman of the Joint Congressional Economic Committee.

Before President Truman presented his "transition of stability" program in his mid-year economic report, O'Mahoney had a subcommittee digging up all of the facts on unemployment.

Here are some of the things the O'Mahoney subcommittee found out:

Unemployment rose from 2.2 million in June, 1948, to 3.8 million at this year's half-way mark, affecting nearly every industrial section of the country.

Even so, 58.3 million persons still held jobs, more than in any previous year in our history except 1948.

As late as 1941, during the so-called defense boom, unemployment, though severe sectionally, "is not now at unreasonably high levels for the country as a whole."

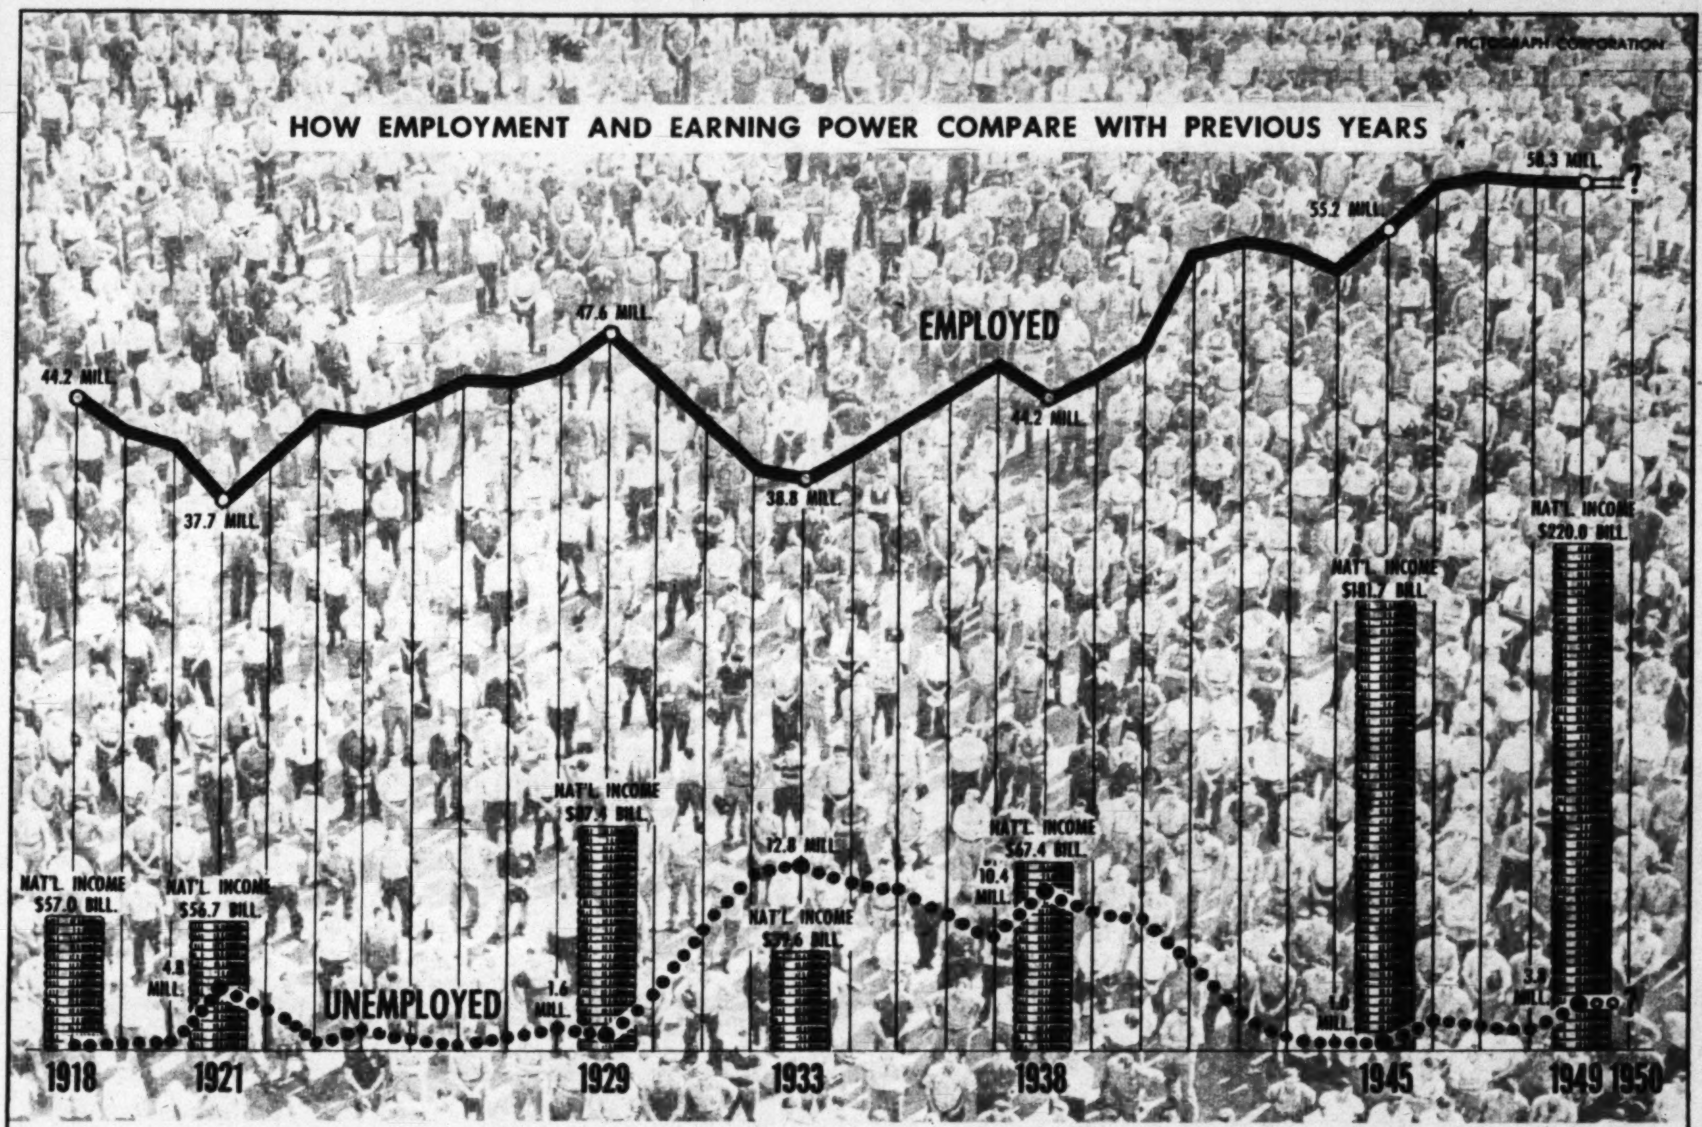
COUNCIL ISN'T GLOOMY

The President's Council of Economic Advisors, headed by Dr. Edwin G. Nourse, conducted a far more exhaustive study of the nation's economic health, came up with the same basic facts.

The Council wasn't gloomy about the outlook. But it frankly acknowledged:

"With unemployment now in excess of 3¾ million we have clearly passed the point where we consider it primarily a 'spot' or a local problem."

ABOUT THE AUTHOR: Robert C. Albright has been a Washington newspaper man for more than 20 years, is an authority on national affairs. He is on the staff of The Washington Post.



Employment this year, in spite of the "spotty" falling off in certain fields, has continued to be at one of the highest levels in American history.

it's time now to start planning a prosperous year

Just who is unemployed? Adult male workers have been as severely hit as women or boys. First to feel the pinch have been factory workers. With the exception of food processing, automobiles and printing and publishing, each of the major industrial groups were employing fewer workers.

A lot depended on where you lived. The sharpest declines occurred in highly industrial New England but unemployment has been heavy in these other states: New York, New Jersey, California, the Carolinas, Kentucky, Tennessee and Alabama. Last to feel it was Illinois and the mid-west. There, joblessness is still relatively low, but is rising.

And a lot depended on what your job was. Farm jobs actually showed an increase. So did government employment. Construction jobs were at about the same level as a year ago. Some hard hit industries like textiles were showing a tendency to come back. Iron, steel, electrical machinery, furniture, leather and transportation workers were feeling the work-shortage acutely.

Generally, new employees with little or no work history have been the first to go. Next usually displaced have been men of advanced age as well as women in the so-called "marginal" class—those who got jobs during the war manpower shortage and stayed on.

Said O'Mahoney: "When you count all the young people just out of school, women workers and people of advanced age, unemployment isn't as large as the figures, at first glance, seem to indicate."

PARADE interviewed O'Mahoney after mid-year scores were in. Conceding "spotty" unemployment, chiefly in manufacturing areas, he still vigorously maintained:

"Business conditions are not black. There's no possibility of their getting black unless we cut off government expenditures which promote business."

Then he went on to expand what has come to be known as the Truman-Nourse-O'Mahoney theory:

"This country can't go on maintaining the national defense spending everyone knows is needed, and keep on making the huge purchases here for Europe's rehabilitation, without creating a demand for labor and production far exceeding anything that existed prior to World War I."

If employment needs a further shot in the arm, O'Mahoney says it can get it from the vast backlog of public improvements neglected during the war—from building new roads, flood control, reclamation and power developments, municipal improvements, new schools and housing.

▶ What should it be called?

▶ Some call it "recession"...

▶ Some call it "disinflation "...

▶ Newsman Albright thinks consumers have simply stopped "reaching for the moon . . ."

What are the big-wigs doing to pull us out of it?

First they are relying on anti-recession brakes already in the law. Most of these were lacking in the last great recession.

Today the government insures bank deposits and regulates the stock market while the Federal Reserve Board maintains elastic controls over credit. Unemployment benefits, old age insurance and farm price supports serve alike as a cushion to the insecure and a peg to purchasing power.

USE WAR MANPOWER TECHNIQUES

To deal with unemployment on the spot, keeping it from spreading, President Truman has set up a new agency in the White House.

Using in reverse the manpower techniques developed in the last war, the government hopes to put people back to work in their own communities.

The idea is to channel government buying of supplies into hard hit areas, start construction projects where they will take up the job slack. RFC loans also will be recommended to help business in these areas.

Beyond that, Mr. Truman has asked Congress to make more jobs by expanding the nation's economy. That boils down to a familiar fair deal remedy—more spending. A substantial bloc in Congress still holds to the older "take in your belt" theory.

Job levels may rise or job levels may fall, but one thing is certain. The old faithful spending issue, it's a sure bet, will go into the next campaign.

Smiling at waiting throngs, Princess Elizabeth alights from car in cherry-trimmed hat. Photographers have found her a gracious, cooperative subject.

Still photogenic is Dowager Queen Mary whose hats have made picture news for years.

Plump, matronly, Queen Elizabeth typifies new royalty, looks like "Mom" to Americans.

Royal Family Warms Up

They pose as a "duty"—but they also enjoy it

As CAMERA STUDIES, the members of Britain's royal house are rapidly becoming as universally popular as movie stars, babies, kittens and cocker spaniel puppies.

Informal, smiling and comfortably at ease, King George, Queen Elizabeth, the Princesses Elizabeth and Margaret and even the dignified Dowager Queen Mary have become faces as familiar to millions as those of neighbors down the street. And little Prince Charles is certainly the most photographed baby on earth.

The reason, photographers agree, is that —except on state occasions—old-fashioned pomp has gone out the window at Buckingham Palace. Since the war's end, the Royal Family has gone informal and cameramen are welcomed whenever the family meets—from the watering spas of Bath to the summer gardens of Edinborough.

"People today are interested in pictures," a PARADE correspondent was told in London, "and the family regards it as its duty to respect that interest."

In addition, the family of George VI seems to enjoy being photographed. They are friendly, gregarious people unfond of pomposity and delighted by informality.

KING GEORGE—AN AMATEUR CAMERAMAN

The king, an amateur cameraman himself, has been photographed in more informal situations than any other ruler in British history and pictures of his wife, his daughters, his mother, his grandson and his son-in-law, have graced hundreds of periodicals on both sides of the Atlantic.

"Their highnesses," a hard-bitten London photographer remarked recently, "are the most cooperative camera subjects in England. I wish that some of our other celebrities would play ball half as well."

Princess Elizabeth and Prince Phillip, Britain's favorite young married couple, pose with their son and heir, "Bonny" Prince Charles, most photographed baby on earth.

Despite recent illness, King George has remained an obliging camera subject. Like his wife, mother, daughters, he's photogenic.

Photographers' favorite is pert Princess Margaret, once snapped in brief bathing suit on Riviera. That picture "distressed" family.

Are You Odor Blind?

IN A STRANGE LABORATORY at Cornell University, scientists are discovering new facts about your nose and its ability to detect smells—good and bad. Lately they've also exploded a few mistaken ideas—such as the old belief that you taste only when you can smell.

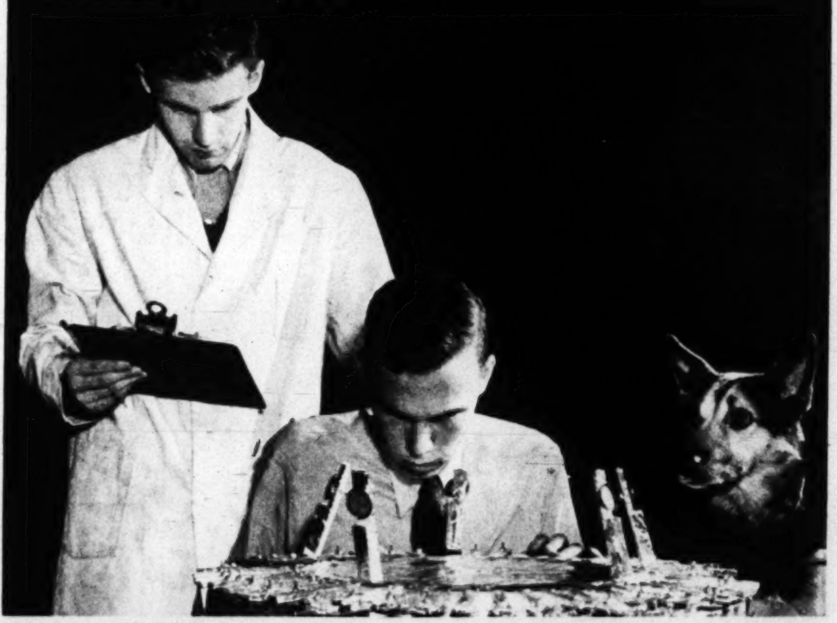
Among the 30,000 people who live around Cornell, in Ithaca, N. Y., researchers have already found 30 who are "smell-blind." Some, it seems, were born that way. Others lost their sense of smell due to scarlet fever, sinus, catarrh. Still others, says Dean Foster, head of the investigation, damaged their smelling senses by using excessively-strong nosedrops or eyedrops.

Many of these "smell-blind" people have cooperated with the investigation by sitting in an airtight glass olfactorium given to Cornell by the Seagram Company. It's known as "the igloo." Before the test begins the room is steam-sterilized. The subject brushes his, or her, teeth, gargles, bathes, dons an airtight suit.

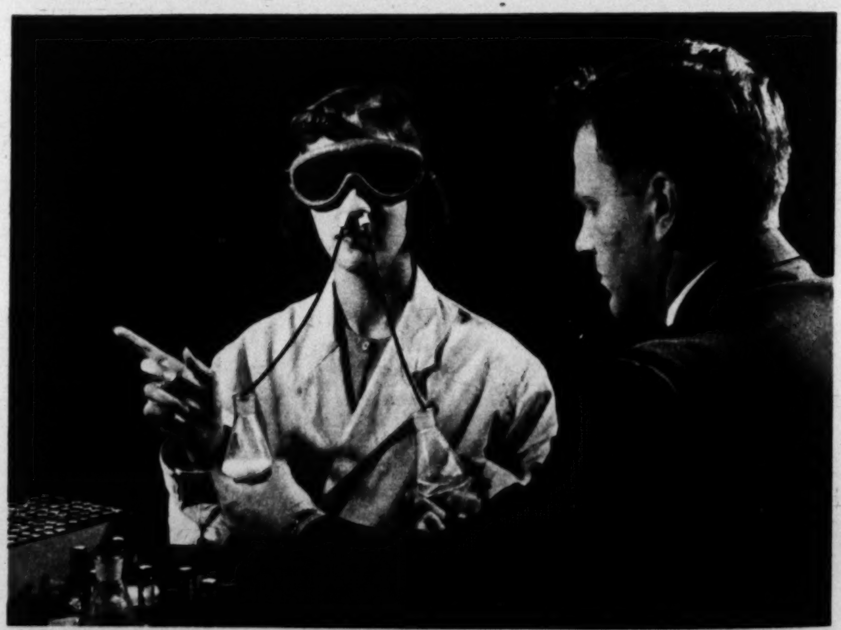
THE "IGLOO" TEST

Then the experiment begins. All sorts of smells are piped in, or presented in flasks on a small turntable. Some smells are sweet, some are sour; others are "burned," "oily," rancid and "nutty." Some are the smells of flowers, bananas, coffee, whiskey, beer, tobacco. From the subjects' reports have come

WHICH WAY OF SMELLING IS BEST:



WHIFFING? Watched by Seeing-Eye dog, blind student whiffs from odor turntable in natural, least-sensitive smelling method.



SNIFFING? This is a much better way to detect odors. Tubes bring a pure odor, in lab test, deep into the subject's nostrils.

Just as certain people are color-blind, others have trouble detecting some smells an assortment of important and curious findings.

One important discovery is that smells, like colors, may be made up of "primary" components. As every artist knows, the primary colors, from which all others are made, are red, yellow and blue. Foster and his Seagram Fellowship researchers have discovered that smell-blind people (known as anosmics) fall into three groups. One group can smell only the burned and oily smells; a second can detect only sweet and sour smells. A third can smell only rancid and nutty odors. This leads the investigators to believe that these three smell groups may be the "red, yellow and blue" of smelling.

Along with the researchers' efforts to group smells have come several incidental findings. What, for example, are the best and worst smells on earth?

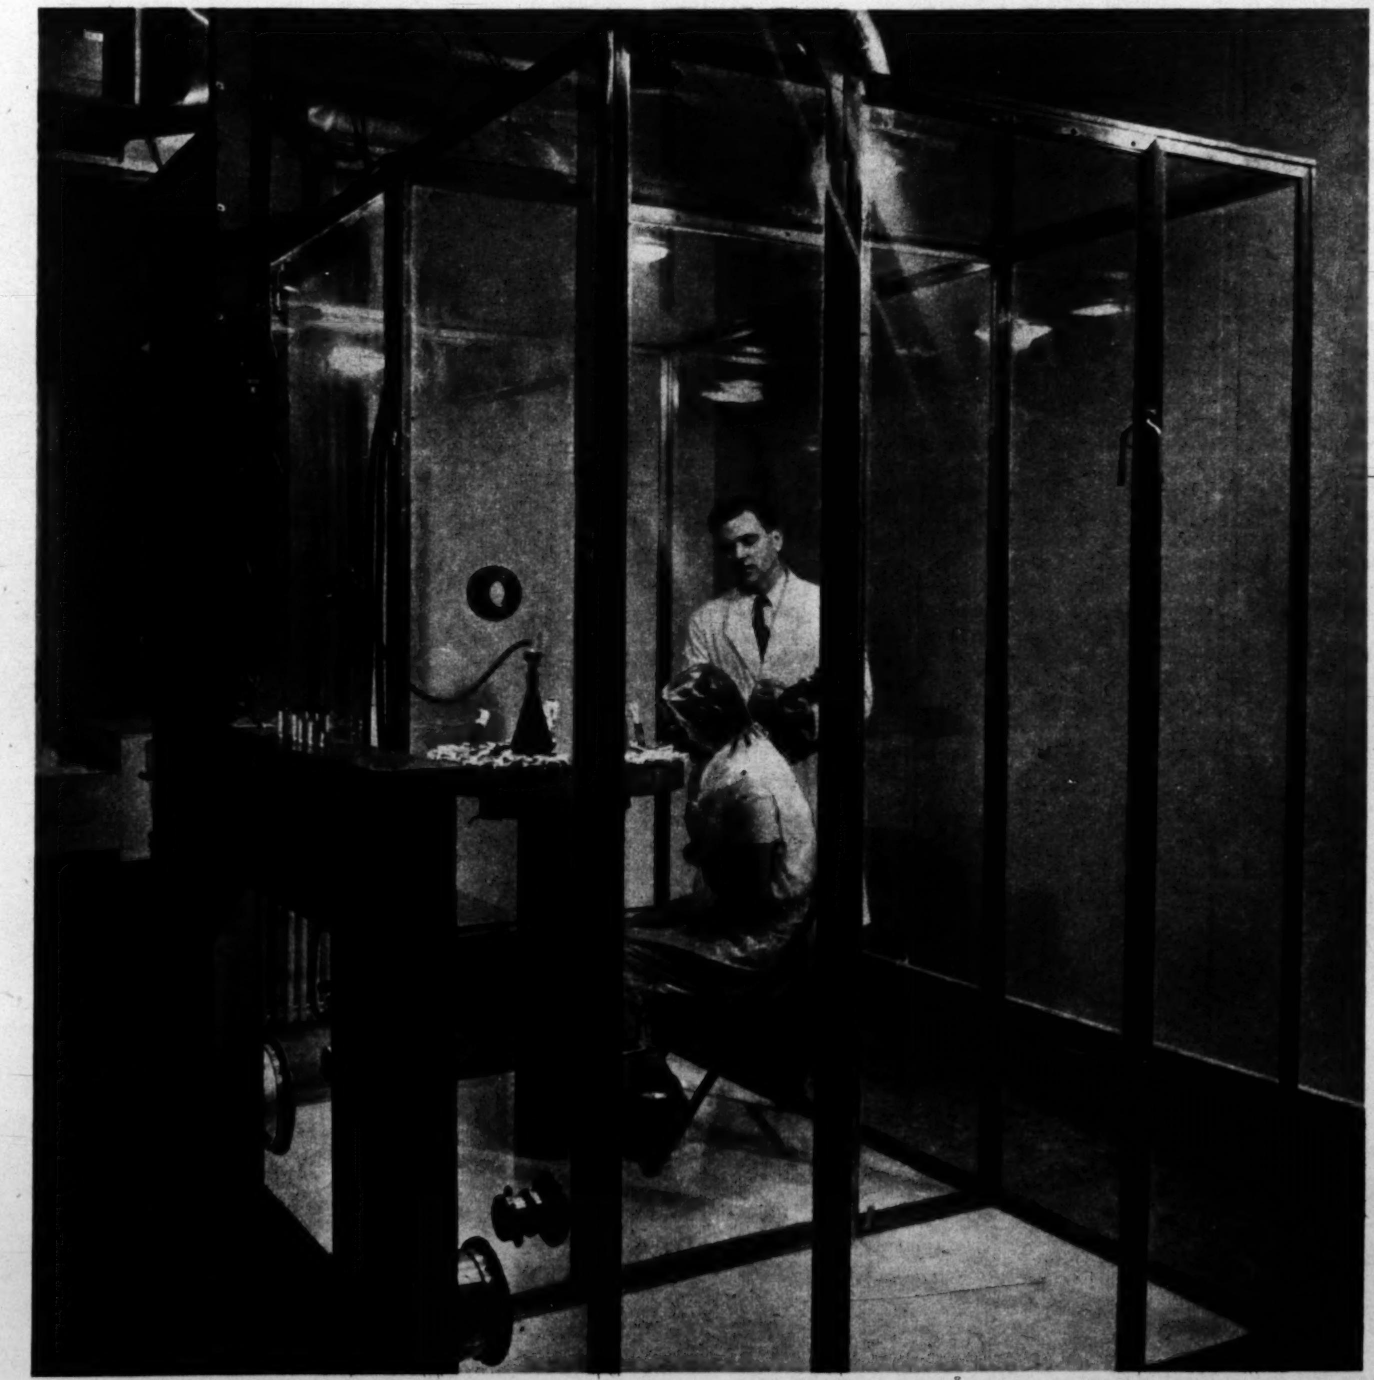
Nobody yet knows the answer, but Foster and his associates are getting some pretty good ideas. One smell that 99% of all adults, and nearly as many children, thought was "tops" was a mixture, oddly enough, of two bad-smelling chemicals. The resulting mixture smells like roses, of all things—and almost everybody loved it.

THE THREE WORST SMELLS

Three smells are candidates for the "worst" honors. One is an acid that smells like a bar-room full of stale cigar smoke. Everybody hated this one. Another was rancid butter which repulsed nearly everyone. But top honors as a bad-smeller went to butyl mercaptan — a chemical of the type which is put in household illuminating gas to warn you if gas is escaping. In an intense form, every one of hundreds of adults tested rejected it; children were especially violent in their dislike.

Another finding was that adults are more partial to rose-like smells than children. Children like roses, but the odor seems to be a little too sophisticated for them. On the other hand children preferred smells like peppermint, spearmint. Children liked strong, "simple" odors.

Your sense of smell may be dulled without your being odor-blind. You can actually have an impaired sense of smell due to (1) the presence of too many odors around you, as on a busy shopping street, or (2) lack of attention. If you stop to concentrate on odors, your sense of smell re-awakens; you will find you can smell many odors that you normally miss.



...OR NOSE BLASTING? This is the best way of all. Inside an odor-proof glass "igloo" at Cornell, girl in sterilized parka gets intensified odor sensation, and reports to researcher outside.

Dismasted but safe: A blistering squall took the mast out of this sailboat, but two adults and three children are unharmed. With a new mast the boat can sail again.

Sailing: How Dangerous?

Late summer squalls are coming: how safe are small boats?

THE RED SQUALL came out of nowhere. The sun went out, the sky turned muddy red and wind boomed down in clouds of hot dust. In five minutes over two hundred men, women and children—sailing in the Larchmont, N. Y., yacht fleet — were in trouble in Long Island Sound on 80 overturning or damaged sailboats. Most of the boats were small craft.

Spectators who watched the boats go over waited to count the death toll, for the squall last July 4 was the worst in the memory of Long Island sailors. Yet of all the 200 people, many of them thrown in the water, not one drowned.

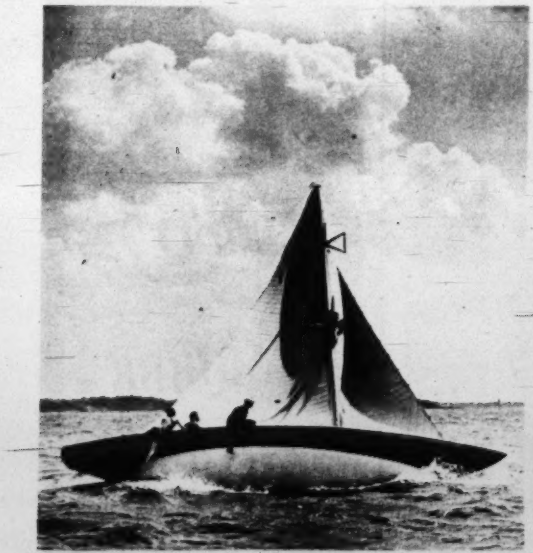
It was an incredible demonstration of the safety of sailing. And in this season of late summer squalls, the question is important: why was there no loss of life? What saved 200 lives in a great storm?

Back of those questions lies one even more basic: how dangerous, in fact, are sailboats? People unaccustomed to them often call them "tippy." What about that tippiness? And what can be done as storms increase at this time of year to bring sailboats safely through squalls?

Sailboats are designed to tip while sailing; they sail better that way. Yet there are thousands of small-boat racers who have never overturned and never will. On the other hand, many small-boat races are held in spite of threatening weather. If a violent squall capsizes a boat, its grinning crew cling to the floating hull until picked up by a committee boat. That kind of capsize is commonplace. Larger sailboats almost never capsize. Masts sometime break, but hulls stay right side up.

What saved the Larchmont sailors? Chiefly: (1) experience and good training, (2) the old rule: "cling to your boat (most sailboats will float) until picked up;" (3) life preservers—a must for every boat. Sailboats are safe when well-handled. Even small children sail safely.

Best thing for a beginner to do if a squall approaches is anchor and go ashore. Experienced hands reduce sail or get sail off entirely. If they keep sail up, they slack off on the sheets (control ropes), so wind will flutter the cloth loosely. But it is best to lower sail entirely and anchor or run before a strong squall.



Scrappy international class sloops like this fear no weather, race when the others take shelter.

Mast held when squall hit small cutter, but sails were ripped by wind. Boat came through safely.

A tough cutter takes beating in Gulf Stream, which breeds bad s s bad storms. When breeze eased, sail was hoisted to full height.

Broadway Soda

By Beth Merriman

BROADWAY'S GLITTERING THOROUGHFARE has given many gifts to the nation, and among the best is the ice cream soda bearing its name. We present a version easy to make at home, with velvety smooth coffee ice cream in chocolate soda. Teen-agers can make the ice cream and serve the sodas to the "gang" for a hot-weather party. As a follow-up to an evening of Canasta or Contract, Broadway sodas served with packaged cookies are a delightful change from run-of-the-mill refreshments. And after a strenuous afternoon of tennis or golf, summer athletes will greet these sodas with cheers. For dessert, try the ice cream topped with sliced, ripe peaches.

Broadway Soda

8 tablespoons chocolate syrup	Cream
Coffee Ice Cream*	Sparkling Water

Put 2 tbsp. chocolate syrup in each of four tall glasses. Add approximately same amount of cream, according to taste, and a generous scoop of ice cream. Fill glasses with ice cold sparkling water. Stir gently to mix.

*Coffee Ice Cream

1 tall can evaporated milk
⅔ cup double-strength coffee
1 package vanilla freezing mix

Chill evaporated milk overnight. Measure 1 cup, whip until stiff. Add remaining evaporated milk to coffee; add freezing mix; beat with rotary egg beater until dissolved. Fold in whipped evaporated milk. Freeze in refrigerator tray until firm. Break up with fork. Beat until fluffy. Return to tray, and freeze until firm.

1. Measure ⅔ cup double-strength coffee; add remaining evaporated milk. 2. Freeze ice cream until firm; remove to a chilled bowl; break up with a fork; beat with chilled rotary egg beater until fluffy. Return to tray; freeze firm. 3. Put 2 tbsp. chocolate syrup in each tall glass; add cream to taste; add ice cream and fill glasses with well-chilled sparkling water.

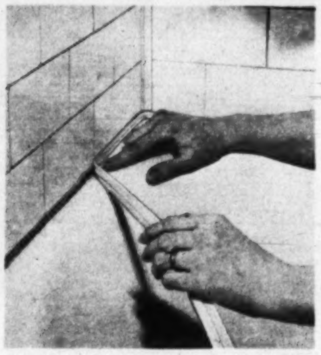
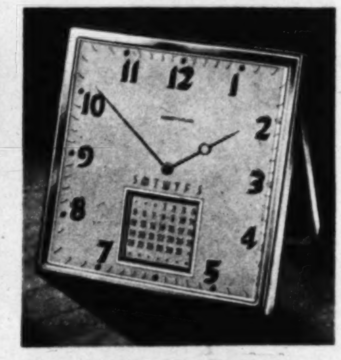
MAILING DEVICE is practical, inexpensive for homes and offices. Holding roll of stamps, available at any post office, it moistens, dispenses, and applies them by movement of thumb. Device also seals envelopes.



EASY-TO-APPLY plastic strip seals and covers cracks between wall and bathtub, washbowl, stall showers, etc. Steam or water then can't damage walls or woodwork. Strip is flexible, won't crack, and can be painted.

BAKING, FREEZING, REHEATING can all be done in new aluminum frozen food container. For fruits, vegetables, stews, meats, desserts, it comes in pint and quart size, and is complete with lid and closing device.



CLOCK AND CALENDAR are combined in a new and unusual unit. Calendar is a 22-yr. automatic setup, can be adjusted for any month until 1970. Frame is metal, numerals are of raised gilt. Unit measures 4" x 4".

Add these other recent advances . . .

THE "METAL CAT," a new mousetrap, is five inches in diameter, two inches high, has mouse-sized hole in its side. Remove the lid and set trap by placing cheese in tiny cup on one side of delicately balanced trap door within. Replace lid. Mouse walks in and, trying to get the cheese, pushes trap door closed in front of entrance hole. This locks trap, which can be immersed in water to kill mouse.

FLUORESCENT LAMPS can now be lighted as quickly as incandescent bulbs. A self-starting ballast eliminates the problems of flickering and defective starters and increases life of the lamp. The ballast is, in itself, the complete mechanism required in the fixture. It lights lamp as soon as switch is operated, and is now available in sizes to fit most popular household units.

REFRIGERATOR WITH a superhetrodyne radio mounted on its door is now available. A four-and-a-half cubic foot unit, it carries the motto of "Music while you work." The door acts as an effective sound baffle, giving the radio good tone quality.

* * *

NEW KIT permits anyone to build a magnetic tape recorder in a few hours, using only a screw driver, pliers, and soldering iron. The finished product uses standard Scotch recording tape, records radio music at fraction of cost of ordinary records. It also provides synchronized sound for home movies and slides, supplies party entertainment and has many other varied uses.

Are you a young wife who knows only half the truth?

Then read this scientific knowledge you can trust about these INTIMATE PHYSICAL FACTS!

It's really a pity when you consider how many young women continue to enter matrimony without first learning the real truth about these intimate physical facts. So often a young wife finds her husband's honeymoon devotion rapidly cooling—yet she doesn't realize the wife is often the guilty one.

Every young woman has a right to be instructed on how necessary vaginal douching often is to intimate feminine cleanliness, health, married happiness, after menstrual periods and to combat odor.

And even MORE IMPORTANT, she should be told that NO OTHER TYPE LIQUID ANTISEPTIC-GERMICIDE OF ALL THOSE TESTED FOR THE DOUCHE IS SO POWERFUL YET SO SAFE TO TISSUES AS ZONITE!

Developed By Famous Surgeon and Scientist

A great surgeon and scientist developed the ZONITE principle—the first antiseptic-germicide principle in the world with such a powerful germ-killing and deodorizing action yet ABSOLUTELY SAFE to delicate tissues. ZONITE is positively non-poisonous, non-irritating. You can use ZONITE as directed as often as you want without the slightest risk of injury to most delicate tissues.

A Modern Miracle!

ZONITE destroys and removes odor-causing waste substances. Helps guard against infection. It's so powerfully effective—it kills every germ it touches. You know it's not always possible to contact all the germs in the tract. But you can FEEL CONFIDENT that ZONITE immediately kills every reachable germ and keeps them from multiplying. Complete douching instructions come with every bottle. You can buy ZONITE at any drugstore.

TELEVISION FURNITURE

Functional pieces spare you cricks-in-the-neck, save space

"IF THINGS GO ON like this," furniture designers said last week, "one hundred and forty million people are going to suffer from a permanent crick-in-the-neck."

They were discussing the problem of adapting furniture to the demands of television. The "video trend" that began last winter (PARADE, April 24) is rapidly gaining momentum as new units, like those shown, are introduced.

Conventional pieces leave the householder with two alternatives: 1) he can sit still and crane his neck; 2) he can get up and shift the furniture.

Flip-up device transforms sofas into full-size beds. Low-level table in corner, with built-in lamp, stores bedding.

Group designs of Valley Upholstery (seen on these pages) are explained to buyer.

The answer, furniture designers decided, lies in swivels and sections.

SWIVEL CHAIR TURNS COMPLETELY AROUND

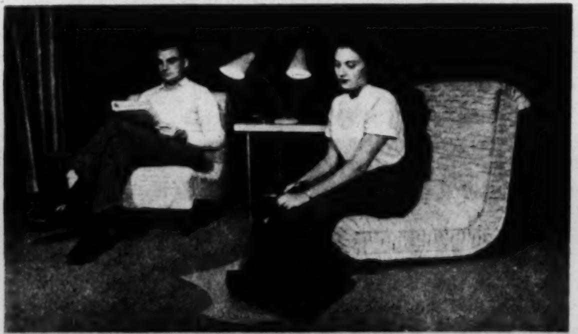
A swivel gives a chair a 360-degree "visual range." Designing a unit in sections increases its usefulness. A sofa, for example, can be broken up into a settee and an individual chair. A low-level table, angled into a corner between the ends of two divans, turns out to be a storage space for linens.

What distinguishes this "furniture of the television age" is the fact that it is engineered to function equally well in one-room apartment or mansion.

And so today, when Mr. Jones hears his favorite television program announced, he need only swivel his big easy chair around with a push of his foot to have an "orchestra seat."

Mrs. Jones can easily seat a dozen guests in her 14-by-16 living room because functional engineering increases furniture seating area by as much as 40 percent. Mass production keeps most units in the medium-price range.

Settee for cards is single unit with facing backs. Card table straddles open center.



"Flop chair" can be tipped over backward to make the sitter comfortable close to floor. They are made in pairs.

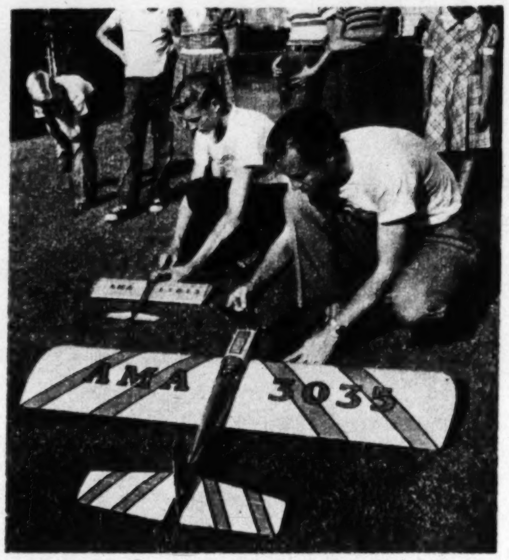
PETERS, DIVISION OF INTERNATIONAL SHOE COMPANY, ST. LOUIS 3, MO.

When model planes crash, damage usually varies directly with weight. Light models, like this, often suffer no more than bent prop.

New midget plane, which comes in kit form, can be assembled without special tools in three hours.



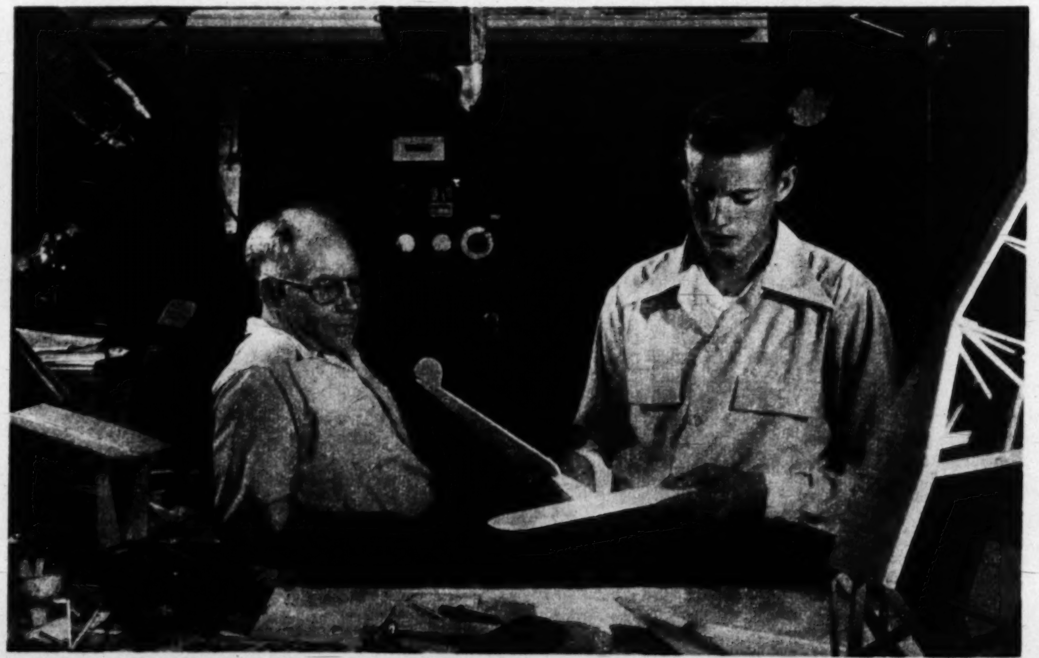
Old and new: heavier engine needs big plane for support; small model mounts the new midget.

IT'S RACE-TIME FOR MINIATURE PLANE FANS

SOME PEOPLE FLY as a hobby. Others take to the sky for a living. But five million of America's most enthusiastic aviators get in their flight time without ever lifting their feet from the ground.

Backyard fliers if there ever were any, the latter group embraces aviation's model plane fans, the girls and boys—and oldsters, too—who take their sport and its miniscule flying machines as seriously as does many a full-blown aviation big-wig. It's a tremendous sport.

Youngster admiring large model holds newest in miniature aircraft. Rubber-band powered, it costs 75 cents, looks like real plane.



John Butler of Los Angeles (right) shows dad models powered by new light-weight, low-cost engine.

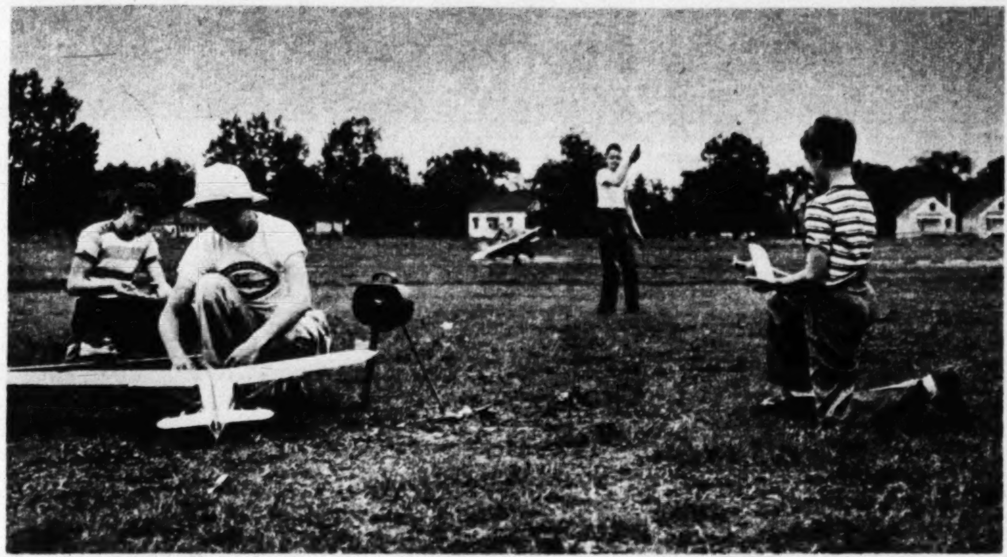
Though it will be on display at International Model contest, engine is too new to compete under rules.

CHEAP ENGINES WILL BOOST MODEL FLYING

CHIEF STUMBLING BLOCK of most model plane enthusiasts in the past has been the twin bugaboo: high cost and intricate assembly.

Gasoline engines—favored by most advanced model builders — have always been relatively heavy and expensive. And space to fly large models is limited.

At the same time, thousands of small fry, genuinely interested in building their own planes, were giving up in despair as they discovered that their limited mechanical ability

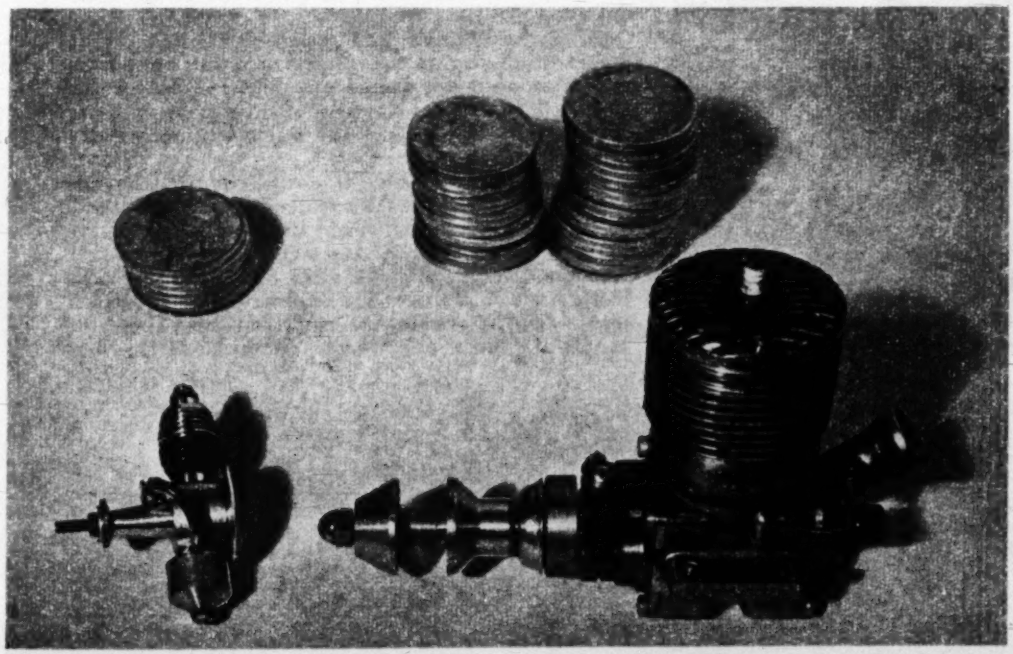


Gasoline-powered model flies in circle guided by control string. Straight-line model speed record of 81.587 m.p.h. was set this summer by Eugene Stiles, an Alameda, Cal. model enthusiast.

Today, the best of aviation's model builders are gathered in Detroit, nervously tinkering with their planes, awaiting the curtain call for the Third International Model Plane Contest which will come bright and early Monday morning. Monday will be an exciting day.

For the cream of the builders, the International is the proving ground that can lead to fame and reward. For the millions of everyday model enthusiasts who can only look longingly at the sports' elite, it affords a preview of the technical advances which they can incorporate readily into their own modest hobby.

If they look closely, the model builders will not be disappointed. For on exhibition at the International—which is sponsored by Plymouth Motor Corp.—will be two of the most radical innovations to hit the sport in years: a new light-weight, low-cost, mass-produced gasoline engine and a midget model plane (see photographs) which not only sells for less than a dollar, but can be assembled easily by a youngster.



Silver dollars stacked behind them show relative costs ($7.95 and $37) of bantam-sized model-aircraft engine and heavier, conventional design. Bantam is smallest engine ever mass produced.

was no match for the task of plane assembly.

The new "midgets" may change the picture.

Actually, the assembly-line bantam engine can put gasoline-model, control-line flying into many more backyards. Developed in Los Angeles, it costs only $7.95, will fly a model which can negotiate a circle only 50-feet in diameter instead of the 140-feet required for planes large enough to mount a conventional engine.

Though much smaller than most conventional model planes, the new plane, too, is expected to open the door to additional enthusiasts. Produced by a Chicago manufacturer, it sells for only 75 cents. More important still, the rubber-band powered model can be assembled by any youngster—without special tools or skills—in three hours. Moreover, it looks and flies like a real airplane.

Neither engine or plane will race in this week's International. They're both so new that the rules don't cover them. But for many model enthusiasts, they may well steal the show.

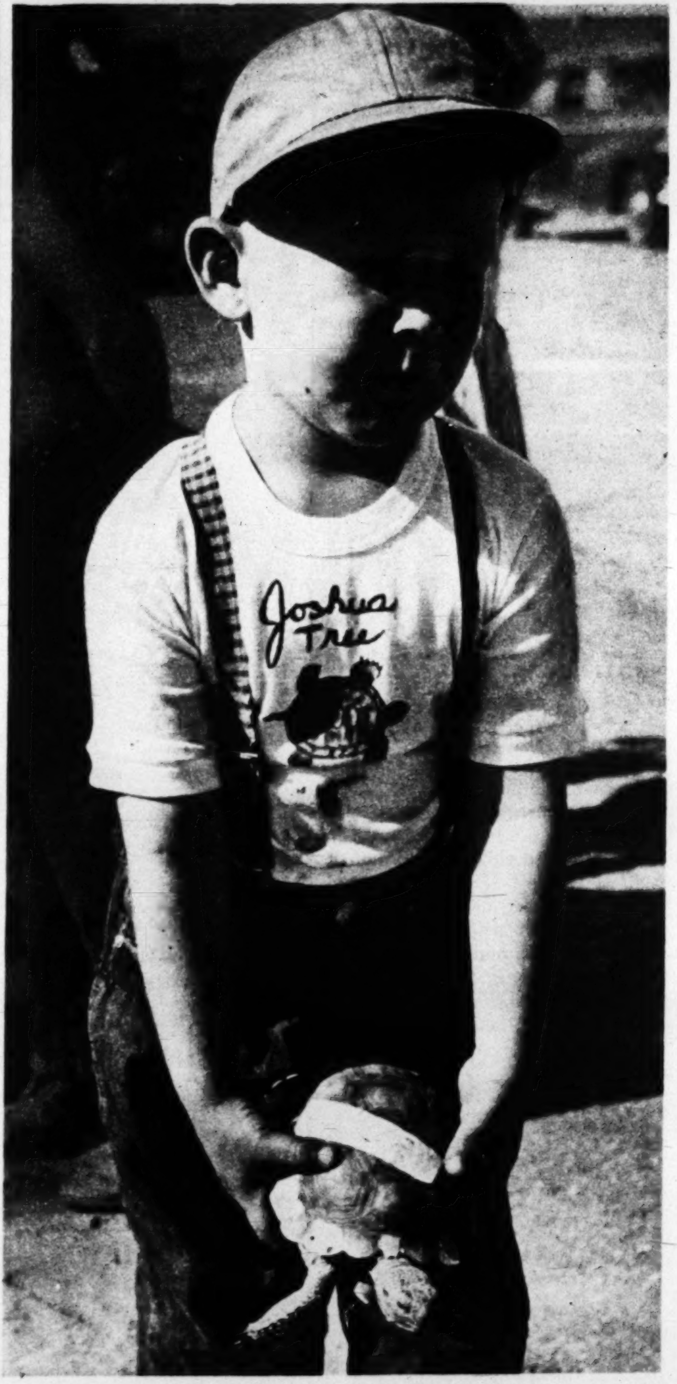
Why be so conservative? - use Tampax

Why hang back any longer when so many other women have tested Tampax for you?

What other women can do, you can do. And Tampax is such a comfort to women when compared with the external kind of sanitary protection! You probably know that Tampax was designed by a doctor to be worn internally and this greatly simplifies the whole problem.... Just think of it—no belts, pins or external pads! No odor or chafing. You cannot even feel the Tampax while wearing it and you need not remove it for a tub or shower bath.... Made of pure absorbent cotton, Tampax comes to you compressed in dainty white disposable applicators—for quick, easy insertion. An average month's supply will go into your purse. Sold at drug and notion counters in 3 absorbencies: Regular, Super, Junior. Tampax Incorporated, Palmer, Mass.



In this corner: the loser. Little Charlie Lafferty had high hopes, but he's glum now. His turtle had trouble staying awake in the sun.

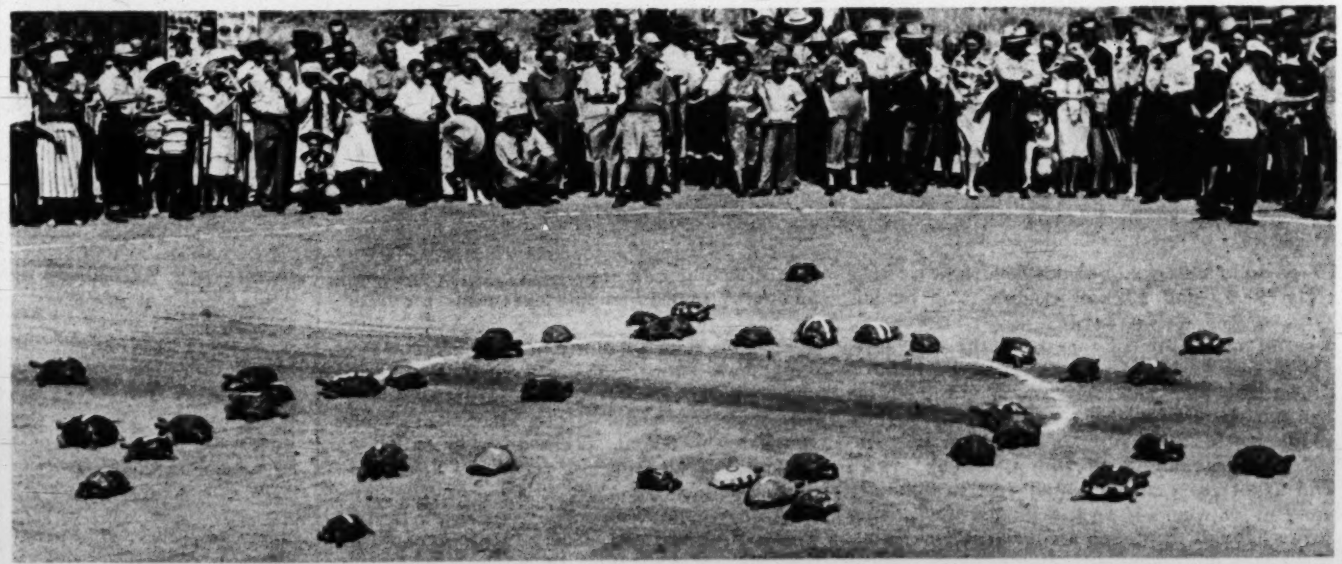
The winner, Herkimar, covered the distance, 10 feet, in one minute. After race, turtles were released in desert.

THE TURTLES OF JOSHUA TREE

THE SLOWEST RACE ON EARTH was run recently in a California town which bears the interesting name of Joshua Tree.

To attract tourists, the Joshua Tree Chamber of Commerce decided to run a turtle race. Out among the cactus and yucca of the surrounding desert went the townsfolk looking for “‘racers.” It took three weeks to round up enough turtles, and finally the racing day arrived.

On each turtle's back, its owner painted its name or number. Turtles are measured and divided into three classes: large, medium, small. Entrants gather at the center of a 20-foot circle. At a signal, they release their “mounts,” and the turtle that first gets out of the circle, in its haste to get back to the desert, wins the grand prize: $20. Afterward, the paint is removed and the racers are taken back to the cactus land they like.



Turtles were released in center circle, owners ran to sideline, and race was on to outer circle. Betting was moderate.

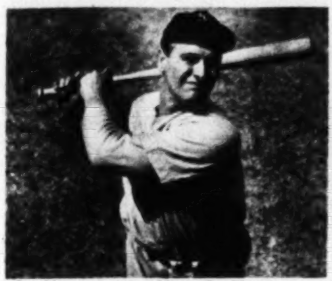
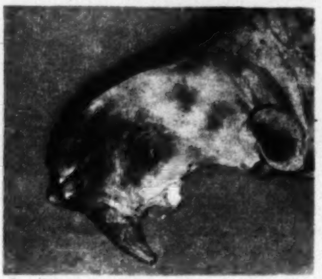
Picture Quiz

If you are an observant PARADE reader — and if your memory is good — this quiz should be a breeze. The photos appeared in recent issues. Put yourself to the test with these seven questions. The quiz answers appear below.

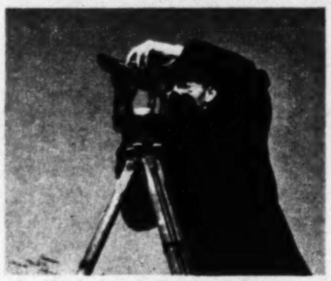
1. Any camera fan can tell you that the streak effect is created by use of time exposure, flash, prism lens.



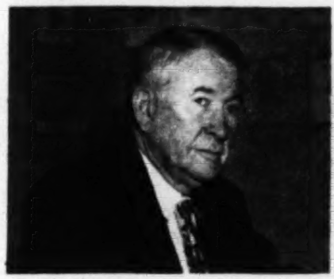
2. He was one of baseball's greatest sluggers. Do you remember how many home runs he hit—700, 354 or 494?



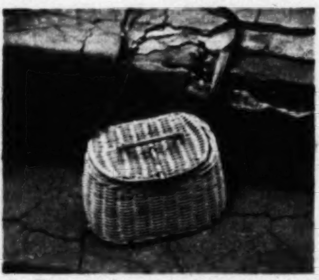
3. This is strictly a teaser. Here's a hint. Your answer depends on your point of view. What is this object?



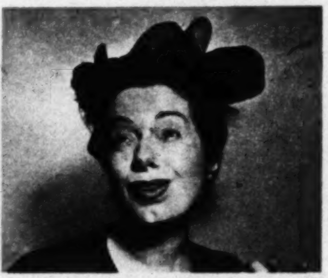
4. You've probably seen this man in action. Is the instrument he uses a theodolite, a troglodyte or sextant?



5. If you recognize this man, you know what office he now holds. Can you name his immediate predecessor?



6. The girl friend calls it a hand bag, but it started out as part of an angler's gear. What is it called?



7. Caricaturing a "French modiste" is this well-known actress. Is she Zazu Pitts, Elsa Lanchester, Ilka Chase?

LAZY BONES: Xavier Cugat has dug up the laziest letter-carrier in America. He's so lazy, instead of delivering his bag of mail daily, he walks over into another mailman's route and re-mails the letters . . .

SHORT, SHORT STORY: Alexis Thompson, the society sportsman and midget racing promoter, has a friend whose ambition since boyhood has been to catch a ball in a major league park. He even went so far as to check on the percentage of fouls hit to the third base line compared with the first base. Then he subscribed for a box located in the area under greatest bombardment of baseballs. Season after season everybody around him seemed to catch a souvenir—but not Alexis's chum. Finally the war caught up with him and the army put him on an intelligence assignment that required the corporal to wear civilian clothes. On leave one afternoon, the G.I. in mufti visited the Polo Grounds. Almost before he sat down a ball popped right in his lap. Gleefully examining the stitched horsehide of his dreams, he started to pocket the pellet when boos and shouts filled the air. "Throw it to a soldier, civilian," the fans screamed in unison, "throw it to a soldier!" . . .

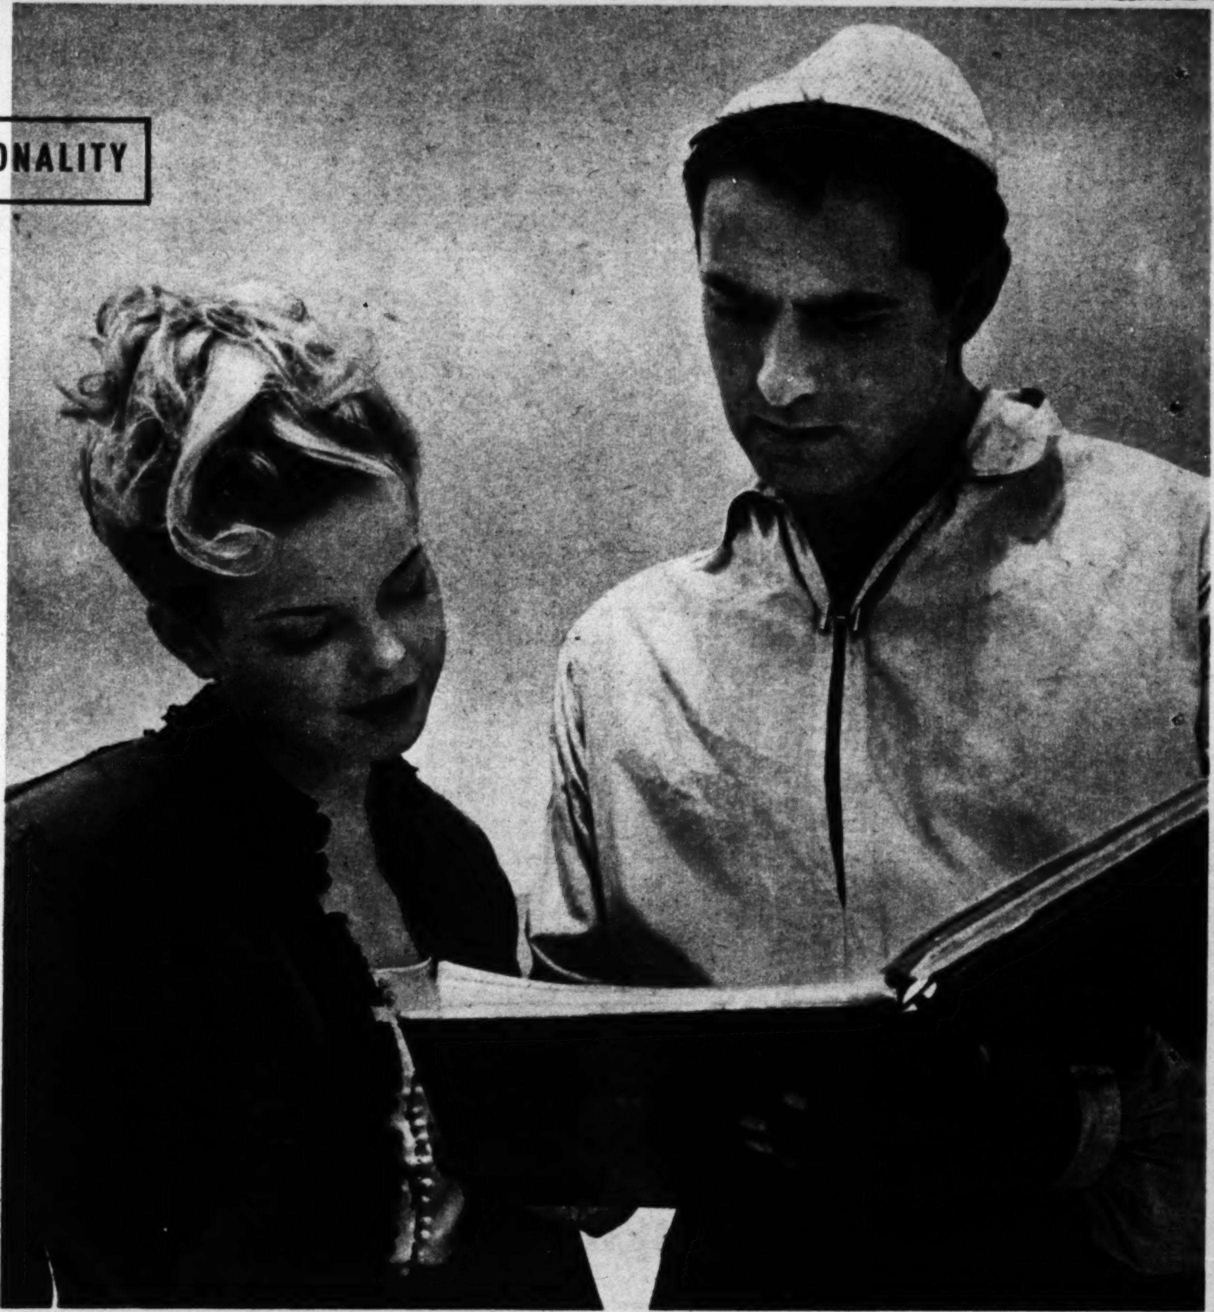
MOVIE PERSONALITY



Cecile Aubry

Young French actress wins coveted lead in "Black Rose"

On desert location in Africa, French "find," Cecile Aubry, rehearses with Tyrone Power for "The Black Rose."

MOVIEMAKERS ARE GIVEN TO SUPERLATIVES, but they can't find enough of them to laud the latest screen "find"—French actress Cecile Aubry.

Miss Aubry, a piquant-faced, vivacious blonde, just turned nineteen, has been acclaimed by some critics as the greatest potential screen star discovered in Europe for many years.

In her first French film, a modern version of the novel, "Manon Lescaut," Cecile became an overnight sensation for her interpretation of the exacting role of "Manon."

Deluged with offers from both European and American producers, Cecile chose a seven-year contract with Twentieth Century-Fox. Along with it came an acting plum many a long-established Hollywood actress wanted—that of leading lady in the film version of the historical novel, "The Black Rose."

SHE LOOKS LIKE SCHOOLGIRL

Hazel-eyed, with a 19-inch waist and just five feet tall, Cecile looks more like a schoolgirl than a dramatic actress. At seventeen she begged her parents, neither of whom had any connection with the theater, to let her quit her lessons and attend the Rene Simon School of Drama in Paris. Her ambition was to study ballet and become a dancer.

It was at this school that many French stars — Michelle Morgan among them—began their careers but no one has ever had such meteoric success as Cecile. After two terms, she took part in a series of auditions with 200 other students, and as a result was chosen by the famous French film producer and director Georges Henri Clouzot for the "Manon" role. Paris audiences at once liked her performance.

Cecile still likes ballet but thinks acting is a far greater challenge. Those who have directed her say her talent for conveying depth of feeling on the screen is amazing.

AN EXCITING BEGINNING

Her introduction to work with a Hollywood company on location has been as exciting as anything ever put on film. The company started out in Casablanca. The first day's shooting involved a cavalcade of one thousand camels. Forty-four Arabs had to be hired as "assistant directors" to keep the camels in order. As the "Black Rose," a half-Saracen, half-English beauty sold into slavery, Cecile was dramatically rescued from the harem-bound caravan by Tyrone Power. Although the temperature was over 100 degrees, Cecile was disguised as a boy and had to wear several layers of heavy clothing, for her "rescue."

In Morocco, torrential rains stalled production for days. Accidentally, Cecile was separated from the movie company and had to take shelter in a native Arab village. Soldiers of the French Army Command finally located her and took her back.

The picture will be completed in England, then Miss Aubry will come to America for a stint in Hollywood. She speaks perfect English having learned it in childhood.

If the combination of blonde beauty, pert youthfulness and the customary Gallic flair for dramatization mean success, petite Cecile should be a sensation.

Between scenes Cecile takes time out to dunk her poodle, "Satin." Her favorite hobbies: sailing, skiing.

THE WRATH and THE WIND
A NOVEL BY ALEXANDER KEY

"Four-thousand Dollars!"

It was the bid of Two-Jack, the most evil man along the infamous Florida coast. "Five-thousand!" Maury said quietly. Suddenly Two-Jack whipped out his pistol. The room shook with shots. Although Zeda could not speak, to even whisper "thank you," she would always love this handsome stranger, Maury St. John, who rescued her from a fate worse than slavery.

What wild terror had made Zeda a mute... and why was this lovely high-born girl

SOLD

to the highest bidder

in a secret auction so daring it shocked even the most sophisticated rogues of the Florida coast

What strange spell does this silent beauty cast over Maury St. John, reckless renegade doctor? Why does he gamble his fortune . . . and fight a duel to the death to "buy" Zeda . . . knowing that the scandal to follow may ruin his chances of winning the hand of Catherine, the golden-haired New England goddess he loves so wildly? And why—when Catherine wants him so—does she have to destroy his love so savagely? You'll discover the answers in this fast-paced, fascinating new novel by Alexander Key, "The Wrath and the Wind."

"Powerful and unforgettable"—Baltimore News

In a series of lightning-paced scenes, "The Wrath and the Wind" mounts to its terrific climax. First, Maury tries to recoup his fortune by running a boatload of slaves in from Cuba . . . then, almost single-handed, he quells the raging yellow jack epidemic, with the lovely, courageous Zeda beside him. How the wrath of the sea hurls the coast town into oblivion as Maury and Zeda escape the hurricane's fury . . . how, at last, Zeda finds not only the power of speech but the fulfillment of love . . . makes a tense, tender story that you'll think about long after you've finished the last thrilling page. But make no mistake—"The Wrath and the Wind" is far more than a great love story. It is also the pulsating picture of a frontier town in old Florida . . . rich, tough and bawdy . . . where anything goes. And it's yours FREE, together with "Strong Citadel"—yes, BOTH free when you mail the coupon below. Don't delay! Do it today!

"You'll never have me! Never! Never! Never!"

cried Catherine. What strange violence had the blood-red moon kindled in this cold New England beauty? What demon possessed her to murder love—the only love she ever really wanted? Discover the answers in "The Wrath and the Wind."

Was she a secret agent . . . a princess-in-hiding or just a very beautiful and ambitious working girl?

Every Time She Made A Move High Society Gasped—But Loved It!

Yes, she set tradition on the skids—but the blue bloods fell in love with her just as you will. She's a devilish angel, a wildcat with a kitten's purr, this Katia. But how did she manage to marry Hal Lane, society's most eligible man-about-town? For Katia's a rank "outsider." Hair too red. Eyes too green. Curves too tempting. And what of Hal's sweetheart, Ellen, the choice of Hal's silken-mannered, steel-willed mother? There's bound to be trouble, society predicts.

STRONG CITADEL

"It's a swift and exciting novel"—says N.Y. Mirror

How Ellen tries to recapture Hal—abandoning her own standards and even risking social disgrace—how at last, Katia and Hal find a happiness they thought would never be theirs—makes Katharine Newlin Burt's "Strong Citadel" must reading! Yours FREE, with "The Wrath and the Wind"—BOTH free when you mail coupon.

"Who is she?" society asks! Among the jangling bracelets on her arm is one of priceless jewels . . . the heirloom of a royal family. But the rest are from the five-and-dime! And what is the secret scandal this red-headed bombshell blasts from behind the fashionable locked doors of her husband's family mansion—the strange truth that finally brings happiness instead of pain?

"Morgan Did to Women What Amber Did to Men" says The Cleveland Press about Sir Harry Morgan, history's most famous—and amorous—renegade. Yes, women would go to any length to keep this bold buccaneer. Yet only one risked everything, including her life, to hold him. She was the sultry, beautiful Carlotta, who dared to promise him what no other woman dared to offer!

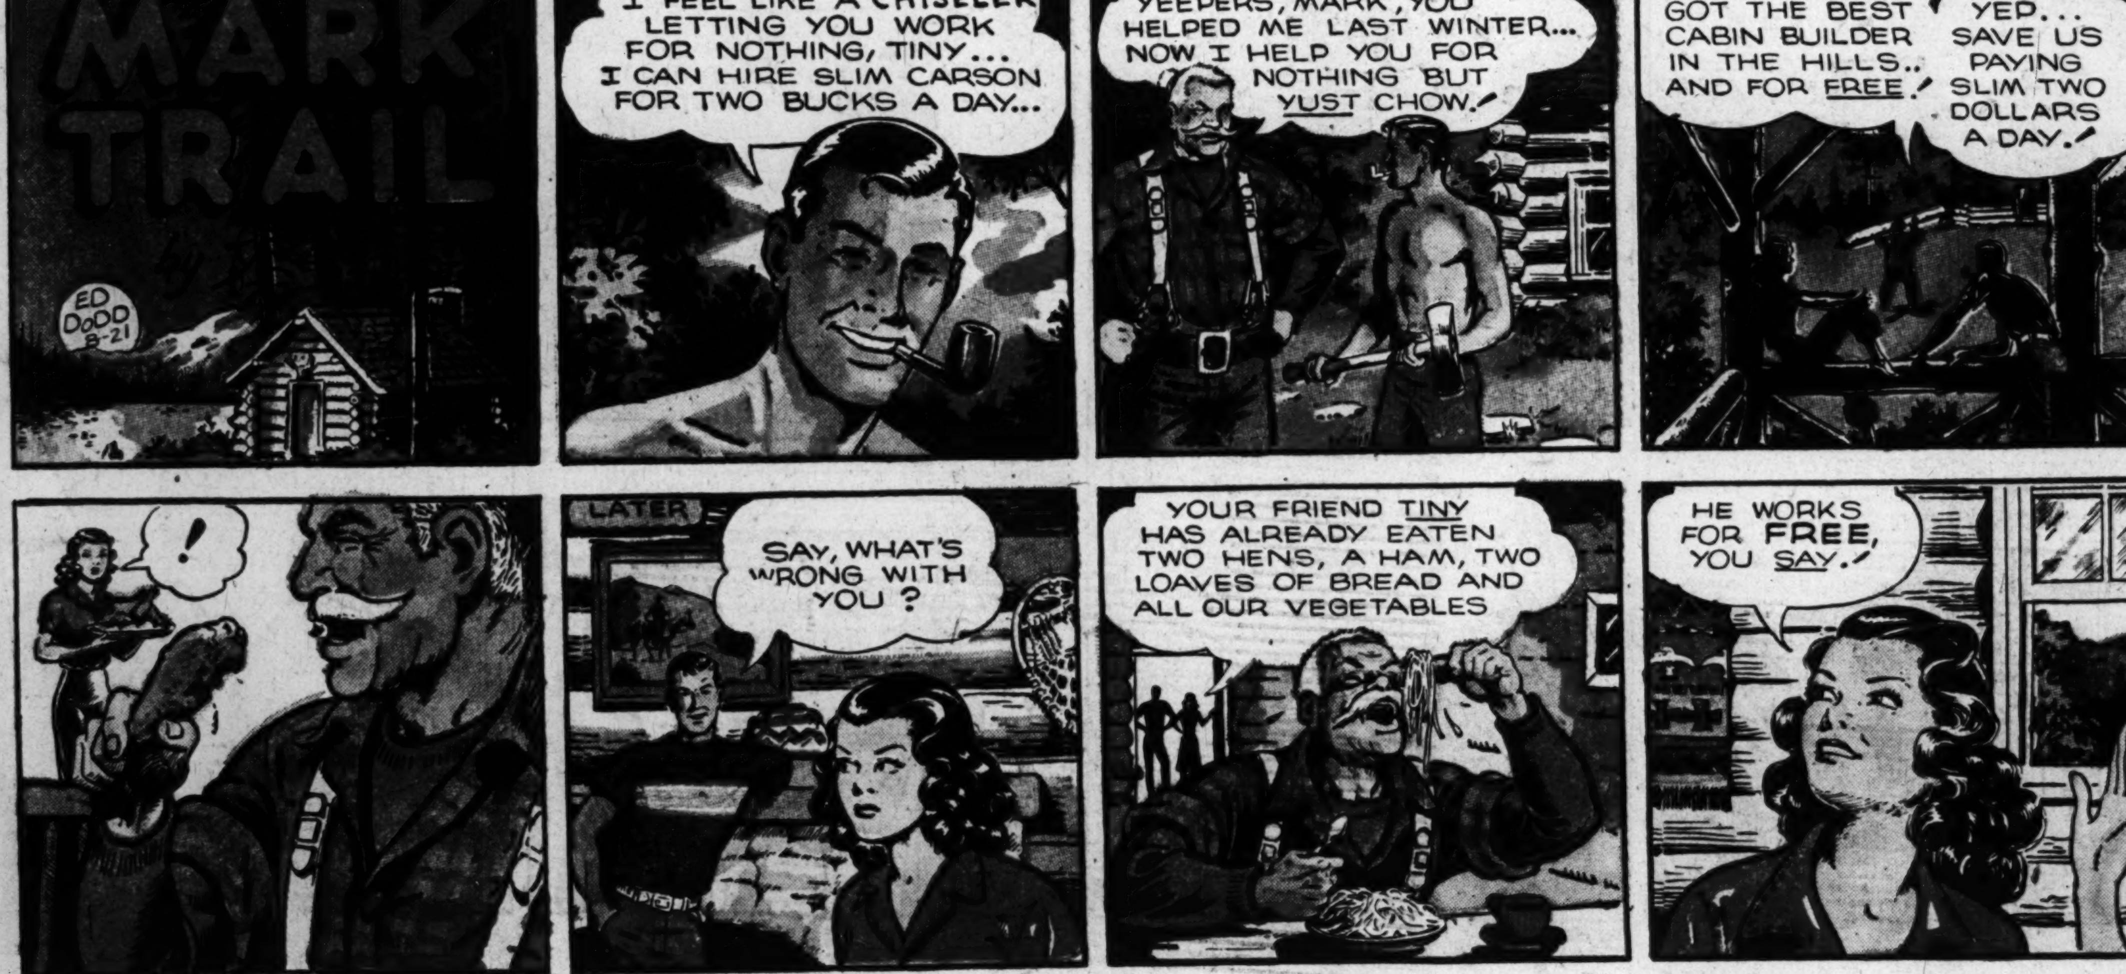
STEVE CANYON
by MILTON CANIFF
STEVE, HOW DID YOU LEARN SUMMER SMITH AND OLEY LEY HAD BEEN SECRETLY MARRIED?
I FOUND A DIET LIST OF HERS WHICH SHOWED SHE IS GOING TO HAVE A BABY — THEN I CHECKED BACK AND LEARNED THEY HAD KEPT THEIR WEDDING QUIET BECAUSE ALL DRAGONFLY PILOTS ARE REQUIRED TO BE SINGLE MEN...
IT TOOK GUMPTION FOR OLEY TO INSIST UPON FLYING TO RESCUE LES CANADIEN WITH ALL THAT ON HIS MIND! WE SHOULD HAVE HEARD SOMETHING FROM THEM BY NOW!
NO BREAK IN OLEY LEY'S RADIO SILENCE?
NOPE
HOW THE TIME CRAWLS ALONG WHEN YOU'RE SWEATING OUT A MISSION!... HEY! —HERE COMES THE BRIDE!
Radio
HELLO, SUMMER, I---
WAIT UP, MISSY! WHAT HAVE WE DONE TO RATE THE DEEP FREEZE?
YOU LET OLEY GO — YOU COULD HAVE STOPPED HIM...
I TRIED TO, SUMMER, BUT OLEY SAID HE HAD BROKEN THE "NO-MARRIAGE" RULE AND HIS CONSCIENCE WOULD HAUNT HIM IF HE DIDN'T LEAD THE FLIGHT...
LIKE SMALL BOYS PLAYING SOLDIER
—AND IF HE IS LOST, I'LL BE A WAR WIDOW WITHOUT A WAR! HOW EMBARRASSING!
HEY, SUMMER, LADY, THAT DOESN'T SOUND LIKE YOU!
OLEY'S TIMETABLE CALLED FOR HIM TO HAVE PICKED UP LES CANADIEN LONG BEFORE NOW...THEY'RE DUE TO BE PUSHING THOSE P-40'S OVER HANWUN —HIGHTAILING HOME —RIGHT THIS MINUTE!
OH, SURE —SURE...
BUT THERE IS ONLY ONE P-40 HEADING WEST OVER HANWUN...



MARK TRAIL

I FEEL LIKE A CHISELER LETTING YOU WORK FOR NOTHING, TINY... I CAN HIRE SLIM CARSON FOR TWO BUCKS A DAY...
YEEPERS, MARK, YOU HELPED ME LAST WINTER... NOW I HELP YOU FOR NOTHING BUT YUST CHOW!
CHERRY, WE'VE GOT THE BEST CABIN BUILDER IN THE HILLS.. AND FOR FREE!
YEP... SAVE US PAYING SLIM TWO DOLLARS A DAY!
LATER
SAY, WHAT'S WRONG WITH YOU?
YOUR FRIEND TINY HAS ALREADY EATEN TWO HENS, A HAM, TWO LOAVES OF BREAD AND ALL OUR VEGETABLES
HE WORKS FOR FREE, YOU SAY!

YOU PROMISED TO BUY ME AN ICE CREAM CONE TODAY
I CHANGED MY MIND
I'VE DECIDED TO SAVE MY MONEY
YOU'RE JUST A PIKER AND A CHEAP SKATE-- I'M THROUGH WITH YOU
NOW I FEEL LIKE A HEEL
YOO-HOO--- DIS IS A PEACE OFFERING, NANCY

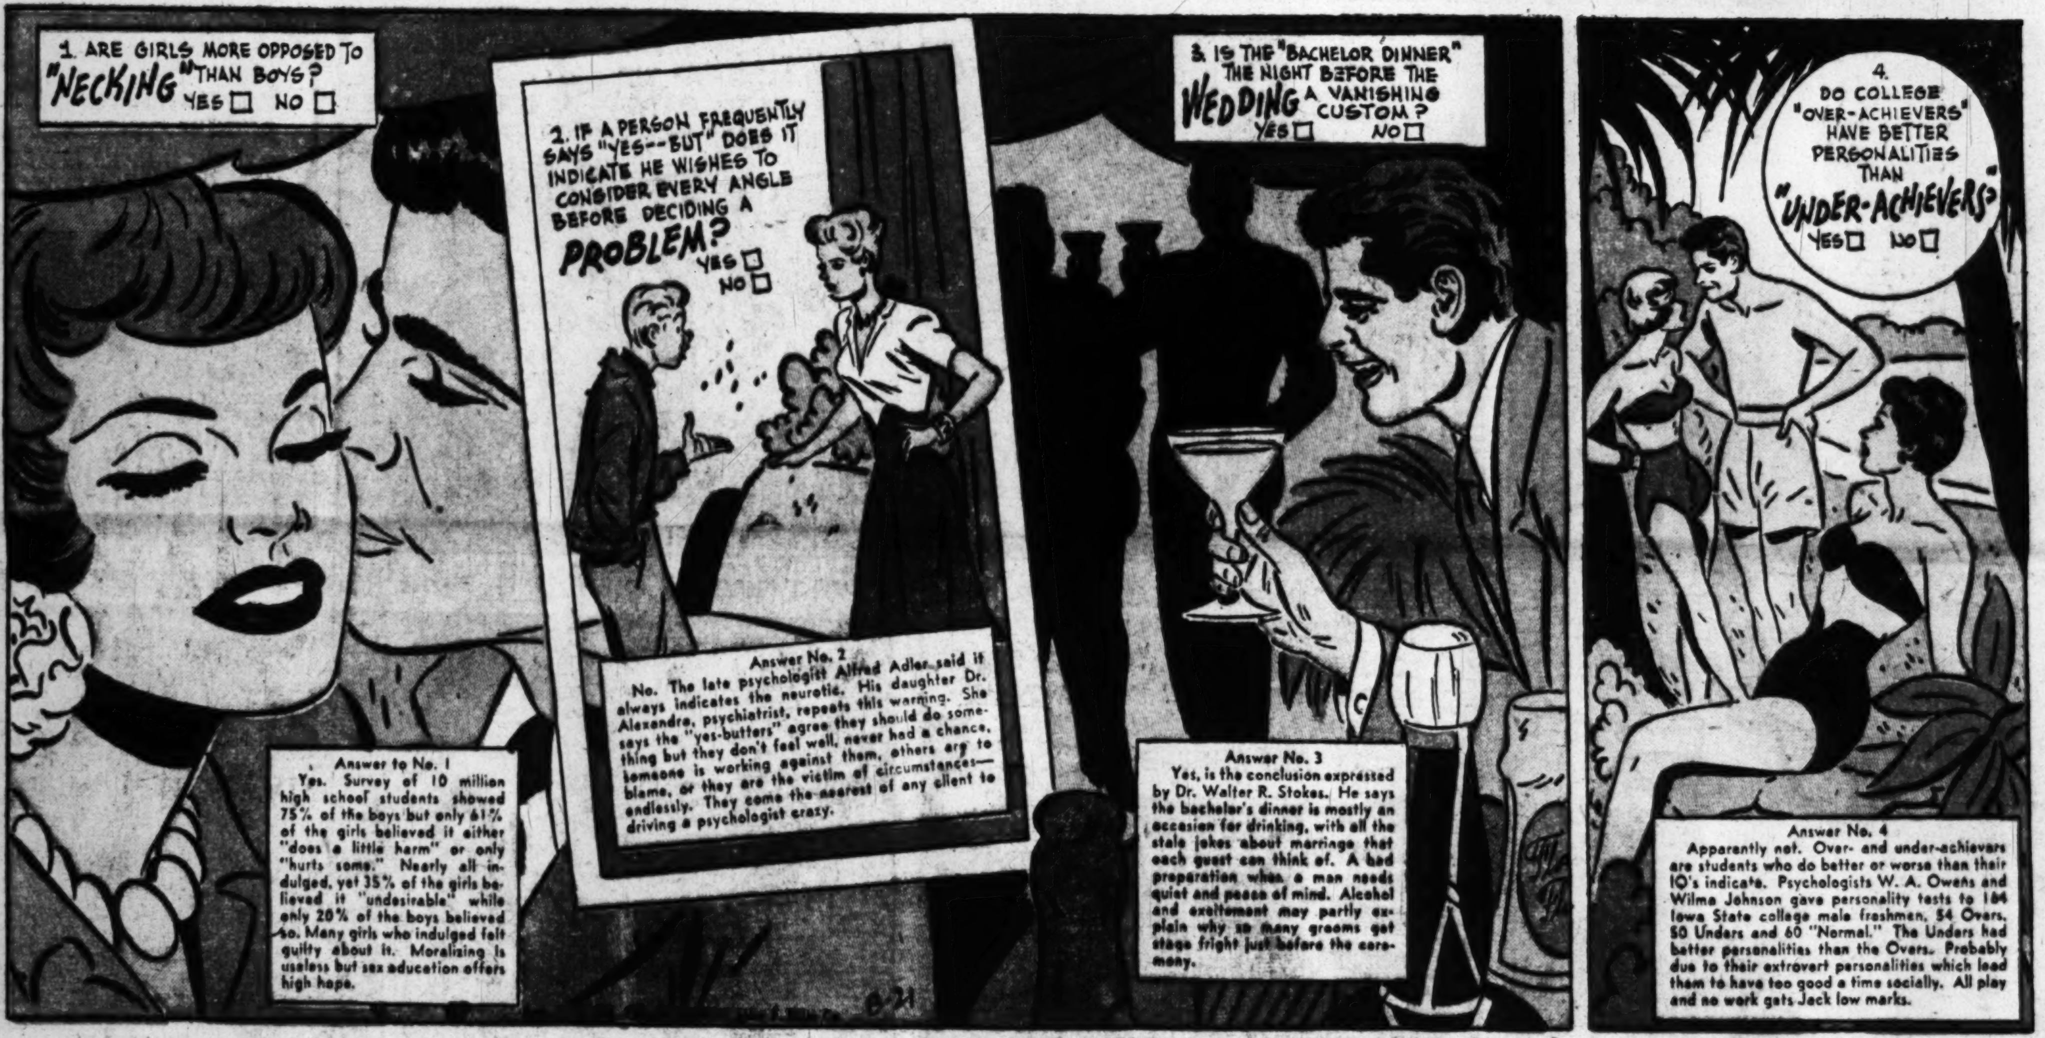
LET'S EXPLORE YOUR MIND

by ALBERT EDWARD WIGGAM D.Sc.



1. ARE GIRLS MORE OPPOSED TO "NECKING" THAN BOYS? YES ☐ NO ☐
2. IF A PERSON FREQUENTLY SAYS "YES--BUT" DOES IT INDICATE HE WISHES TO CONSIDER EVERY ANGLE BEFORE DECIDING A PROBLEM? YES ☐ NO ☐
3. IS THE "BACHELOR DINNER" THE NIGHT BEFORE THE WEDDING A VANISHING CUSTOM? YES ☐ NO ☐
4. DO COLLEGE "OVER-ACHIEVERS" HAVE BETTER PERSONALITIES THAN "UNDER-ACHIEVERS?" YES ☐ NO ☐
8-21

Answer to No. 1

Yes. Survey of 10 million high school students showed 75% of the boys but only 61% of the girls believed it either "does a little harm" or only "hurts some." Nearly all indulged, yet 35% of the girls believed it "undesirable" while only 20% of the boys believed so. Many girls who indulged felt guilty about it. Moralizing is useless but sex education offers high hope.

Answer No. 2

No. The late psychologist Alfred Adler said it always indicates the neurotic. His daughter Dr. Alexandra, psychiatrist, repeats this warning. She says the "yes-butters" agree they should do something but they don't feel well, never had a chance, someone is working against them, others are to blame, or they are the victim of circumstances—endlessly. They come the nearest of any client to driving a psychologist crazy.

Answer No. 3

Yes, is the conclusion expressed by Dr. Walter R. Stokes. He says the bachelor's dinner is mostly an occasion for drinking, with all the stale jokes about marriage that each guest can think of. A bad preparation when a man needs quiet and peace of mind. Alcohol and excitement may partly explain why so many grooms get stage fright just before the ceremony.

Answer No. 4

Apparently not. Over- and under-achievers are students who do better or worse than their IQ's indicate. Psychologists W. A. Owens and Wilma Johnson gave personality tests to 164 Iowa State college male freshmen, 54 Overs, 50 Unders and 60 "Normal." The Unders had better personalities than the Overs. Probably due to their extrovert personalities which lead them to have too good a time socially. All play and no work gets Jack low marks.

GOOD MORNING, MR·OVERDRAW·
NO, NOT YOU AGAIN..... AH... I MEAN... WHAT CAN I DO FOR YOU?
THE NATIONAL BANK J·OVERDRAW CASHIER
I'D LIKE TO BORROW TWENTY DOLLARS·
SORRY, WE DON'T LEND MONEY TO MINORS· BESIDES, WHAT SECURITY HAVE YOU?
HEAVENS, IF I HAD ANY SECURITY I WOULDN'T NEED A LOAN·
WE'D HAVE TO HAVE SOMETHING OF VALUE TO PROTECT OURSELVES
I COULD LET YOU HAVE MY MOVIE STAR AUTOGRAPH COLLECTION, IT'S WORTH SIMPLY A FORTUNE·
THAT WOULDN'T DO· BESIDES, YOU'D HAVE TO PAY INTEREST·
OH, THAT WOULD BE PERFECTLY OKAY· YOU'D GIVE ME MY INTEREST BACK WHEN I PAID MY LOAN, WOULDN'T YOU?
CERTAINLY NOT· THAT'S THE CHARGE FOR USING OUR MONEY·
YOU MEAN, YOU'D KEEP IT? WELL, IF I PAID YOU INTEREST THAT WOULD BE MY MONEY AND YOU'D BE USING THAT· WOULD YOU PAY ME INTEREST ON MY INTEREST?
NO... LOOK, I'M A VERY BUSY MAN.....
AUG·21·49·
I'LL WRITE YOU A CHECK FOR TWENTY DOLLARS
BUT YOU HAVE NO BANK ACCOUNT·
WOULD YOU BE CASHING THE CHECK?
NO!
THEN I WOULDN'T NEED A SILLY OLD ACCOUNT·
WE'D GO BANKRUPT DOING BUSINESS THAT WAY·
YOU'D GO BANKRUPT OVER A LITTLE OLD TWENTY DOLLARS? WEEPS! FATHER BETTER MOVE HIS ACCOUNT!

HEE, HEE! YOU SHOULD HAVE SEEN THE BEY'S FACE! I THREW PEBBLES AGAINST HIS WINDOW AS YOU ORDERED. WHEN HE CAME OUT TO INVESTIGATE, HE COULDN'T MISS SEEING THE SILHOUETTES OF MADEMOISELLE AND THE BLOND PILOT IN YOUR LIGHTED WINDOW.
AND M'SIEU LEE APPEARED QUITE COOPERATIVE.
OF COURSE... HE WAS MOST ANGRY THAT I HAD TRICKED HIM INTO COMING, BUT I WAS AT MY ALLUKING BEST.
WHEN I STOOD VERY CLOSE TO HIM, MY NEARNESS, THE SCENT I WORE, THE INVITATION IN MY EYES WERE IRRESISTIBLE. HE COULDN'T KEEP FROM CRUSHING ME IN HIS ARMS AND KISSING ME.
HE REGRETTED HIS IMPULSE AT ONCE, BUT IT WAS ENOUGH. MOGUL BURST IN, WAVING A MONSTROUS PISTOL AND MARCHED HIM OFF. MY SILLY LITTLE BEY WAS FURIOUS.
MEANWHILE, IN ANOTHER PART OF THE PALACE.
I'M SORRY, CHAZZ. IT WAS MY BONEHEAD PLAY BUT I DIDN'T THINK MOGUL BEY WOULD COLLAR YOU, TOO.
GUESS HE JUST DISLIKES PILOTS ...WHAT DO YOU FIGURE COMES NEXT?
I DON'T KNOW. HIS COATING OF WESTERN MANNERS IS WEARING KINDA THIN. HIS PRIDE'S HURT AND HE'S LOST FACE.

MOM, IF I MISS THIS PARTY I'LL BE HEARTBROKEN!

"BETTY" BLU-WHITE HELPS A DINGY PARTY DRESS DAZZLE WITH CINDERELLA GLAMOUR

HERE'S WHERE I PLAY FAIRY GODMOTHER

LOOK! MY ONLY PARTY DRESS—AND IT'S SO DINGY AND GRAY-LOOKING!

CHEER UP, FOLKS! WATCH BLU-WHITE MAKE THAT DRESS SPARKLE LIKE NEW!

SEE! INSTEAD OF OLD-STYLE CUBE AND LIQUID BLUINGS, YOU PUT THESE BLU-WHITE FLAKES IN WITH YOUR REGULAR SOAP OR DETERGENT.

HOW EASY! AND BECAUSE BLU-WHITE BLUES AND WASHES AT THE SAME TIME, I CAN SKIP THAT EXTRA BLUING RINSE!

YES, AND BLU-WHITE WORKS JUST RIGHT. NEVER LEAVES UGLY STREAKS OR SPOTS! NEVER OVER-BLUES!

AND I CAN USE BLU-WHITE FOR THE BIG FAMILY WASH, AS WELL AS FOR MY NICE THINGS!

BLU-WHITE
Works 2 Ways at Once

1. BLUES
—evenly, without leaving any streaks or spots. And it never over-blues.

2. WASHES
—works with your regular soap or detergent to make clothes cleaner, whiter.

IT'S SAFE FOR EVERYTHING WASHABLE!

Prince Valiant
IN THE DAYS OF KING ARTHUR
BY HAROLD R FOSTER
Synopsis: DOWN FROM THEIR MISTY HILLS COME THE PICTS TO CROWD THROUGH THE OPENING IN THE GREAT WALL INTO BRITAIN. BUT WITHIN THE MILECASTLE ARE PRINCE VALIANT AND HIS KNIGHTS, AND EACH PICT IS DISARMED AS HE PASSES THROUGH!
THE PICTS WHO HAD BREACHED THE WALL EARLIER SWEEP SOUTHWARD UNCHECKED, LAYING WASTE THE LAND. BUT THE COUNTRYSIDE DOES NOT PROVIDE ENOUGH FOOD FOR SUCH AN ARMY AND NO SUPPLIES COME UP FROM THE REAR!
INSTEAD GREAT NUMBERS OF THEIR COMRADES ARRIVE UNARMED AND STARVING TO TELL OF PRINCE VALIANT CALMLY STANDING OVER BOTH THEIR SUPPLIES AND THEIR MEANS OF RETREAT!
AHEAD LIES THE CITY OF YORK, A RICH PRIZE, THEIRS FOR THE TAKING. NOT ONCE HAVE THEY THOUGHT OF RETURNING UNTIL THEY LEARN THE WAY IS BLOCKED. THEN ALL EYES TURN TOWARD THEIR NORTHERN HILLS!
"GENTLEMEN," SMILES VAL, MOUNTING HIS STEED, "YOU WANTED SOME FIGHTING. IN A FEW DAYS THERE SHOULD BE PLENTY!" AND HE RIDES AWAY ALONG THE WALL.
HE WISELY CHOOSES TO RIDE ON THE ENEMY SIDE OF "THE WALL," KNOWING THAT EVERY PICT HEREABOUT HAS JOINED THE INVASION.
AT A POINT SOME DISTANCE FROM THE BREAKTHROUGH THE SENTINELS ON THE WALL ARE SURPRISED TO SEE ONE OF KING ARTHUR'S KNIGHTS RIDE UP FROM THE NORTH AND DEMAND ADMITTANCE!
TO THE CAPTAIN OF THE GUARDS VAL SAYS: "SEND SWIFT MESSENGERS ALONG THE WALL TO TELL EVERY MOUNTED MAN TO MEET HERE!"
WITHIN A FEW DAYS VAL IS LEADING THE POOREST-LOOKING TROOP HE HAS EVER SEEN AGAINST THE INVADING HORDES OF FIERCE HILLMEN!

OH, HOW NICE THOSE NEW GARDEN CHAIRS LOOK! ALMOST TOO NICE TO SIT IN WE BOUGHT 'EM TO USE, REMEMBER
IT WILL BE SUCH A RELIEF NOT TO CARRY CHAIRS FROM THE HOUSE. AND THEY SET OFF THE GARDEN SO! IT REALLY MAKES IT LOOK LIKE SOMETHING
WHY DON'T YOU SIT DOWN, IF IT ISN'T TOO MUCH TROUBLE?
I'M ALMOST AFRAID TO PUT MY WEIGHT ON IT. ARE YOU SURE YOU HAVE THE LEGS ADJUSTED JUST RIGHT?
COULDN'T BE SURER. I SAT IN 'EM MYSELF TO MAKE CERTAIN
ALL THE SAME IT SEEMS A LITTLE RICKETY. IT DOESN'T SET QUITE EVEN ON THE GRASS... THERE THAT'S STEADIER
NEVER KNEW THAT SITTING DOWN WAS SUCH A COMPLICATED MATTER
SEEMS TO BE ALL RIGHT, BUT I'M ALMOST AFRAID TO LEAN BACK
PETE'S SAKE! RELAX! YOU'RE NOT GOING OVER NIAGARA IN A BARREL
NO. BUT I ONCE FELL OUT OF A HAMMOCK WHEN I WAS A LITTLE GIRL, AND I'VE NEVER FORGOTTEN IT
THEN IT'S HIGH TIME YOU DID

AND "LORD JOHNNIE"... AND "WINE OF SATAN"! I HEAR THEY'RE THE YEAR'S MOST ROMANTIC NOVELS!
Lord Johnnie
Wine of Satan
AND HERE'S ERLE STANLEY GARDNER'S NEW THRILLER! HOW DO YOU DO IT? WE JUST CAN'T AFFORD TO BUY SO MANY BEST-SELLERS!
YOU MUST BE IN THE CHIPS, BERT, DON'T NEW BOOKS LIKE THESE COST ABOUT $3 EACH?
JOE, ALL THEY COST US IS $1 EACH.. BECAUSE WE GET THEM FROM THE DOLLAR BOOK CLUB.
THE DOLLAR BOOK CLUB! I'VE KNOWN ABOUT IT, BUT NEVER GOT AROUND TO JOINING.
YOU'LL BE IN GOOD COMPANY, JOE, NEARLY A MILLION SMART FAMILIES BELONG!
WELL I'M NOT GOING TO WAIT ANOTHER DAY! HOW DO I JOIN?
YOU'RE IN LUCK, JOE, THE DOLLAR BOOK CLUB IS NOW MAKING A WONDERFUL OFFER TO NEW MEMBERS!

Which TWO ~~one~~ of these Best-Sellers do you want

for just a 3¢ STAMP

with DOLLAR BOOK CLUB MEMBERSHIP

THE MOST sensational offer in Dollar Book Club history! By joining now, you may have your choice of any TWO books described here—for just a 3-cent stamp! And—as a new member—you may choose as many more as you wish for your current selections at only $1.00 each. These best-selling books are typical of the selections received by Dollar Book Club members. Club membership regularly offers you the most popular current novels for only $1.00 each—a saving of 60% to 75% from the established retail prices of the same books in the publishers' editions. Name the TWO books you want for just a 3-cent stamp, and your first $1.00 selection, on the membership form below and mail it today.

The ONLY Club That Brings You Popular New Books for just $1

... regardless of the higher prices of publishers' retail editions. You save from 60% to 75% during the year!

No other book club brings you popular current books by famous authors for only $1.00 each. Just imagine that! With book manufacturing costs at an all-time high; with most current best-selling fiction costing $2.75 and $3.00 in the publishers' editions at retail, the Dollar Book Club continues to bring its members the cream of the current books for the one low price of $1.00 each! And in handsome, full-size editions, bound in an exclusive Club format!

There is no fee for joining the Dollar Book Club, and there are no dues of any kind. You are not even obligated to take a book every month; the purchase of as few as six books a year fulfills your membership requirement.

Nearly a Million Families Buy Books This Money-Saving Way—Start Enjoying Your Membership Now!

Upon receipt of the coupon below, with a 3-cent stamp, you will be sent your choice of any TWO of the six best-sellers shown at the right. As an extra privilege, extended to you as a new member, you may choose, as your first regular selection for $1.00, another one of these best-sellers. (Or even choose as many more as you like at $1.00 each, if you want more than one now.)

Then, every month, you will receive the Club's descriptive folder called The Bulletin. The Bulletin describes the forthcoming book selections. It also reviews about ten additional titles (in the original publishers' editions selling at retail for $2.50 or more) available to members at only $1.00 each. You may purchase any new selection for only $1.00 each, or you may purchase any of the other titles offered for $1.00 each. Or you may prefer to take no book at all at a particular time, and this is your privilege. You agree only to take a minimum of six books out of all selections offered during each year.

This offer to new Dollar Book Club members is so unusual that we urge you to take advantage of it at once. Mail the coupon now!

DOUBLEDAY ONE DOLLAR BOOK CLUB, Dept. 8MWP, Garden City, New York

Please enroll me as a Dollar Book Club member and send me at once the following TWO books for the enclosed 3-cent stamp:

Also send the following book (or books) as my first selection and bill me $1.00 each:

With these books will come my first issue of the free descriptive folder called "The Bulletin" telling about the two new forthcoming one-dollar bargain book selections and several additional bargains which are offered at $1.00* each to members only. I am to have the privilege of notifying you in advance if I do not wish either of the following months' selections and whether or not I wish to purchase any of the other bargains at the Special Club price of $1.00 each. The choice of books is entirely voluntary on my part. I do not have to accept a book every month—only six during each year that I remain a member. I pay nothing except $1.00 for each selection received plus a few cents shipping cost.

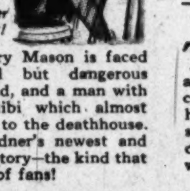
Pride's Castle

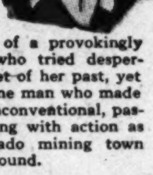


By FRANK YERBY

More Exciting Than Even "The Golden Hawk" and "The Foxes of Harrow"!

PRIDE DAWSON was a gambler—and loot was his goal, whether it was a robber-baron's fortune or a woman's heart. But one day he had to make a choice—between the woman he loved and the woman who wanted him for 40 million dollars! It's Frank Yerby's most dramatic novel to date—a story of old New York in its toughest and most colorful era!

Lord Johnnie

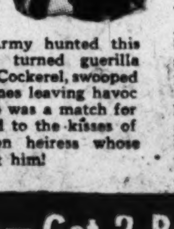


By LESLIE T. WHITE

Meet the Greatest Rogue and the Most Surprised Bride in All England!

THE ravishing Lady Leanna wed Lord Johnnie the Rogue on his way to the gallows, and planned to forget him. But in less than 24 hours, while the hangman and police were searching for him, Johnnie was inside her door, breathless but arrogant, to claim his wedding night! This swashbuckling tale of love and adventure is a joy from beginning to end!

THE CASE OF THE Cautious Coquette

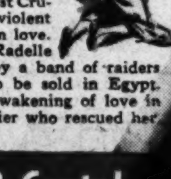


By ERLE STANLEY GARDNER

Beware This Blonde—Her Caress Is A Booby-Trap!

THE inimitable Perry Mason is faced with a beautiful but dangerous woman, a dead husband, and a man with "a million dollar" alibi which almost sends the wrong party to the deathhouse. It's Erle Stanley Gardner's newest and most sizzling mystery story—the kind that has won him millions of fans!

The Golden Fury

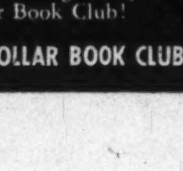


By MARIAN CASTLE

Capricious and Untamed—yet This Spitfire Was a Slave to One Man!

THE dramatic story of a provokingly beautiful woman who tried desperately to forget the secret of her past, yet continued to love the one man who made her remember it. An unconventional, passion-filled novel, teeming with action as colorful as the Colorado mining town which forms its background.

THE Scarlet Cockerel



By GARALD LAGARD

Two Reckless Lovers Who Defied the Rules of War!

THE whole Union Army hunted this Confederate doctor turned guerilla chief who, as the Scarlet Cockerel, swooped down behind Federal lines leaving havoc in his wake! No Yankee was a match for him until he succumbed to the kisses of a ravishing Washington heiress whose father had sworn to get him!

Wine of Satan

by LAVERNE GAY

Branded as Public Property for Any Man!

HERE, drawn against the exotic and unusual background of the First Crusade, is a novel of violent passion and forbidden love. As a child, Zoe Radelle had been captured by a band of raiders as legitimate loot to be sold in Egypt. She knew the first awakening of love in the arms of the soldier who rescued her
